TO THE

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY,

THE author of the following work has preſumed to inſcribe it to your Majeſty, as the moſt proper Patron for a ſubject of this nature. Born an Engliſhman, and glorying in the place of your nativity, it is not imagined but your Majeſty will have ſome regard for the purity of your native language. Your ſpeeches already delivered in the Senate, are ſtrong arguments that your Majeſty is no ſtranger to its elegance and its ſtrength. Could the author be indulged one wiſh, your Majeſty's court would admit no other language within its verge; and foreigners would be obliged to make themſelves maſters of it to render them ſucceſsful in their applications, and acceptable in their addreſſes. It was ſuch a ſtep as this as contributed to make the Roman language the moſt extenſive, and the moſt elegant of any in the univerſe. The French, though now ſpoken in all the courts of Europe,

Europe, cannot lay claim either to the conciſeneſs, purity, or ſtrength of expreſſion to be found in the Engliſh; its ſoftneſs may ſuit the diſpoſition of thoſe who are born ſlaves, but is neither ſuitable to the free and manly ſentiments of Engliſh Kings, or Engliſh Subjects.

Proud of the honour of being an Engliſhman, and governed by a Prince born in England, the author begs leave to ſubſcribe himſelf,

Your MAJESTY's moſt loyal,

And moſt obedient

Subject and Servant,

PREFACE.

THE ſtudy of languages has, in all ages, been recommended by the example of the greateſt ſcholars and ſtateſmen; but the knowledge of our own language ſhould be the firſt object of our thoughts, and the chief employment of our leiſure hours. By theſe means, we ſhall be enabled not only to free it from the ruſt of barbarity, which cleaves, in ſome meaſure, to all languages, but ſhall likewiſe acquire taſte ſufficient to form a proper judgment of the ſtile and elegance of our native authors. If we take into our conſideration the variety of acceptations in which the ſame word is uſed by different writers, nay, even by the ſame author, we ſhall find a ſtrong obligation to make the language of our country the ſubject of our meditations. Without this application, we muſt be ſtrangers to propriety, and blind to the beauties, which the pages of our learned countrymen diſplay to our minds. The only books which could furniſh us with any aſſiſtance in this literary purſuit, muſt be the works of ſuch authors, who have applied themſelves to compile the various ſenſes, in which the words of our language are uſed.

But theſe compilations are not confined to the uſe of the natives; the inhabitants of all the globe are compelled to avail themſelves of their help, and are obliged to make uſe of them as keys to unlock the treaſure of our language. The importance of Dictionaries being ſo great, the public, inſtead of wondering at their variety, ſhould rather wonder that their variety is not greater. As moſt lexicographers have had a different point in view, their labours have all proved, in ſome degree, of general uſe, and none, unleſs the mere copier of a precedent work, can be ſaid to have been uſeleſs. Yet, while the different branches of lexicography were kept diſtinct, the public ſeemed to have been defrauded of the profit that might have been acquired from their cultivation. Neither time, nor curioſity, nor wealth, have put it in the power of every one to be maſter of the various Dictionaries which have been publiſhed in the different branches of ſcience. To unite theſe ſcattered rays, as it were, into one focus, has been the intention of the author of this work; who is ſo far from depreciating the labours of his predeceſſors, as to own, that, were it not owing to them, this work would have been wanting in many of its perfections. To unite profit with amuſement, improvement with delight, and worth with frugality, has been his chief aim; and if the reader attends to the articles which are contained in the ſubſequent pages, he doubts not but he will congratulate himſelf in having met with a dictionary on a more extenſive plan than any that have already been publiſhed. Every word made uſe of in the common occurrences of life, or in the ſeveral arts and ſciences neceſſary for the ſubſiſtence or improvement of our being, are explained, ſo as to convey a preciſe and determined idea of their meaning. The various fountains, from which they are derived, are pointed out in ſuch a manner, as renders them intelligible to the moſt illiterate, and the meaneſt capacity. The different ſenſes, affixed to the ſame word, are ſupported with authorities from the moſt celebrated writers. The accents are placed over the proper ſyllables, to prevent a vicious pronunciation. And, in order to inform thoſe, who are not acquainted with grammar, of the part of ſpeech to which each word belongs, the initial letter is placed immediately after the word, to ſhew whether it be a verb, ſubſtantive, adjective, &c. The principal kingdoms and cities of the world are deſcribed with a comprehenſive brevity, which conveys to the mind an idea of their importance, as well as their ſituation. As this work may probably be more uſed by natives than foreigners, a deſcription is given, under their proper articles, of all the counties and remarkable curioſities that are contained in this iſland.

For the amuſement of the curious, the lives of the moſt eminent poets, and other illuſtrious men, who have flouriſhed in theſe kingdoms, are delivered in a ſuccinct manner. And that the fair ſex, as well as foreigners, might not lament the want of a Grammar, adapted to the genius of our language, and ſuited to the meaneſt underſtanding, we have prefixed a new Grammar, which, we may venture to ſay, is plainer (if not more comprehenſive) than any that have yet appeared.

A

GRAMMAR OF THE ENGLISH TONGUE.

GRAMMAR is the art of ſpeaking and writing any language properly.

As language is compoſed of words, a word of ſyllables, and a ſyllable of letters, Grammar is properly divided into four parts; 1ſt, That which treats of letters, or the moſt convenient and proper marks or ſounds for expreſſing words, called orthography, when confined to writing; and orthoepy, when applied to ſpeech. 2dly, That part which relates to ſyllables, and treats of their true pronunciation with reſpect to accent and time, is called proſody. 3dly, That part which relates to words, and treats of their kinds, their derivations, their endings, their changes, their analogy or likeneſs to each other, is called etymology: and 4thly, That part which treats of the right placing or joining of words together in a ſentence, is called ſyntax.

To begin with the firſt part of theſe branches, that is to ſay, with orthography, or the art of writing words with their true and proper letters. This word is derived from ορθος, orthos, Gr. right, and γραφη, graphe, Gr. writing.

The firſt ſtep to orthography muſt be to know the true ſound of the letters, which in the Engliſh alphabet are twenty-ſix, as zard or uzzard, that is, ſ hard.

From the foregoing alphabet it appears, that among the ſmall letters ſ has two forms, the long ſ being uſed in the beginning and middle of words, and the ſhort s at the end.

The letters are divided into vowels, ſemivowels, conſonants and diphthongs.

A vowel is a letter that makes a full and perfect ſound by itſelf.

A ſemivowel is a letter which makes an imperfect ſound by itſelf, ſuch are r, which is ſounded by twirling the tongue, and ſ by hiſſing.

A conſonant is a letter that cannot be ſounded without a vowel.

A diphthong is a ſound compounded of the ſound of two vowels, ſo as both of them may be heard.

A triphthong is a ſound compoſed of three vowels, as in lieu.

CHAP. I. Of the VOWELS.

THE vowels are ſix, viz. a, e, i, o, u, y.

A, has three ſounds; ſlender, open, and broad.

A ſlender, is found in moſt words, particularly in thoſe which end with an e final, as in face, grace, lane, and in thoſe which end in tion, as creation, abomination, heſitation, ſtation.

A open, is the a of the Italians, or nearly reſembles it, and is uſed in man, can, father, glaſs.

A broad, reſembles the a of the Germans, and is pronounced as if followed by an u or w, as in all, fall, call; this pronunciation ſeems to be borrowed from the Saxons, many of theſe words being formerly written with an u after them, which is now dropped.

The a ſhort approaches to the a open, as in laſs.

The a long, if followed by an e final, is always ſlender, as cam, came, fam, fame.

The a forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or w, as in gain, plain, day, may, wherein it is pronounced like the a ſlender, as in plane.

Au or aw has the ſound of the German a, as in claw, haughty.

E. This vowel occurs more frequently in the Engliſh language than any other, and varies perhaps more than any other in its uſe and ſounds.

Before a double conſonant it is always ſhort, as in fell, dwell, cellar, ſerpent.

At the end of words, it is generally mute, or not ſounded, unleſs in monoſyllables that have no other vowel, as the, me; or in proper names, as in Penelope, Derbe; or when uſed to ſoften the foregoing conſonant, as in ſince, judge, ſiege; or when it ſerves to lengthen the preceding vowel, as can, lengthened into cane; wan, lengthened into wane.

But it muſt be obſerved, that it does not always lengthen the preceding vowel, eſpecially in ſuch words which were written with an ſ in old Engliſh, as gif, now written give, lof, now written love: its being added to ſuch words was perhaps owing to the change of ſ into v, which being formerly written liu, with an u vowel, required ſome other letter to be added, in order to ſhew, that the u was to be pronounced like the v conſonant, not like the u vowel. In the participles of verbs this e is dropped, as in loving, not loveing; and writing, not writeing.

When the e comes before an n, or after an r or l, it has an obſcure ſound, which is ſcarcely perceptible; as in hearken, audible, maſſacre.

It forms a triphthong with a, as in near; with i, as in view; and with u, as in lieu.

Before a it is generally ſounded like e long, or double ee, as in dean, or fear; but in great it is dropped, and gives the a the ſame ſound as in grate.

Ei is ſounded like ee, as in deceive, ſeize.

Eu is ſounded like u long and ſoft, as in Eudoſia.

E, a, u, are combined and ſounded like u long in beauty, and its derivatives.

Eo is ſounded like e long in people; like e ſhort in leopard; and like o ſhort in yeomen.

I, is ſounded long before a conſonant followed by an e final, as in fine; but is ſhort in fin.

Before r or u it is generally ſhort, as in dirt: it forms a diphthong only with e, as in field or believe, where it is ſounded like double e; but in friend, the i is dropped, and the ſound ſhort. In the triphthongs lieu, adieu, view, it is ſounded like u open,

O, is long in words ending with an e mute, as in bone, corrode; and this is ſtill obſerved in compound words wherein the e is omitted, as in corroding. It forms a diphthong with a, and has the ſound of o long, as in moan; as it likewiſe does with i, which is the only proper diphthong in the Engliſh language, as in foil, toil; but in ſome words it is mute, and ſerves only to lengthen the ſound of the i, as in ſpoil, pronounced ſpile; broil, pronounced brile. Joined to another o, it forms a diphthong, and is ſounded like the Italian u, as in loot. It forms a diphthong likewiſe with u or w, as in hour, power; but in ſome words has only the ſound of o long; as in ſoul, grow; in ſow, the verb, ſignifying to ſcatter ſeed, to diſtinguiſh it from ſow, the ſhe of a boar; in bow, an inſtrument uſed in ſhooting, to diſtinguiſh it from bow, a declining of the head; in bowl, a round or ſpherical body, to diſtinguiſh it from bowl, a wooden veſſel or diſh. Ou is likewiſe ſometimes pronounced like o ſoft, as in court, and in cough; like u cloſe, as in could; and like u open, as in rough, tough. It frequently ſhould, conſiſtent with analogy, be uſed in the laſt ſyllables of words, which are derived to us by the medium of the French from Latin words, ending in or; thus we ſhould ſpell authour, errour, honour, labour; but not as innovators, who for want of attending to the genius of our language, and from an utter ignorance of our ancient writers, generally write author, error, honor, labor; for indeed the laſt ſyllable of theſe words is neither pronounced as if written or, or ur, but as if compounded of both thoſe ſounds. Mr. Samuel Johnſon, whoſe works have rendered him juſtly eſteemed, for their elegant correctneſs, and ſublime ſentiments, has endeavoured to reſtore this ſpelling, and it were to be wiſhed, that if the analogy of our language will not ſtrengthen his reaſons, yet even faſhion will give force to his example.

O, in the plural of woman, is pronounced like an i ſhort, women being pronounced wimen; the reaſon of which ſeems to be, that this word was originally derived from the Saxon wifman, or wiman, which makes the plural wimen.

O ſhort is ſounded like u, in ſon, come, which alludes to the Gothic originals ſunnum, cuman, from whence theſe words are derived; wonder is ſounded in the ſame manner, becauſe at firſt written wunder, from wunder, Sax. but afterwards, when the w was uſed, o was added to ſupply the want of a vowel.

U, is long in the laſt ſyllable of words ending with an e mute, as in uſe, and it retains that ſound even in words wherein the e mute is ſuppreſſed, as in profuſion; otherwiſe it is ſhort, as in but, cut, burſt. It is joined with a, e, i, o, but in ſuch combinations has the force of v or w, as in quaff, request, acquit, requite, anguiſh. Sometimes in ui the i looſes its ſound, as in juice, bruiſe: it is mute ſometimes before a, e, i, and y, as in buy, guard, gueſt, guiſe; in the laſt it ſeems to be inſerted purely to ſhew that the g is to be ſounded hard. This vowel ends no Engliſh words except thou and you, and in other words its ſound is expreſſed by ue or ew, as in virtue, true, argue, nephew.

nephew. In words that terminate with ue, the u is mute, in imitation of the French, as in prorogue, plague, ſynagogue, vague.

Y. This vowel is borrowed from the Greek, and its name from the Saxons. As no Engliſh words end in i, when i would occur at the end of a word, it is uſed to ſupply its place, as in thy; it is likewiſe uſed before an i, as dying. It forms a diphthong with a, e, o, and u, as in may, they, deſtroy, buy; and is retained in ſuch derivative words as contain theſe diphthongs, as deſtroy, deſtroyer, betray, betrayer, pray, prayer, ſay, ſaying.

Beſides theſe particular obſervations reſpecting the ſound of the vowels, we muſt add the following general rules.

1ſt. A vowel is commonly ſhort in the beginning, or in the middle ſyllable of a word, when followed by two conſonants, as in opportunity.

2. A ſingle vowel coming before a ſingle conſonant in words of one ſyllable is ſhort, as in bag, dog.

CHAP. II. Of the CONSONANTS.

A Conſonant is a letter that cannot be ſounded without adding a vowel before or after it, as m, which is ſounded em by prefixing a vowel before it; and p ſounded pe, by ſubjoining a vowel after it.

The conſonants are ſubdivided into mutes, and ſemivowels.

A mute is a letter which makes no ſound without a vowel, ſuch are b, c, g, p, q, t, x; all the other conſonants are called ſemivowels.

A ſemivowel is a letter that makes an imperfect ſound without the addition of a vowel, ſuch are f, h, l, m, n, r, s, x, four of theſe are called liquids.

A liquid is a letter which loſes part of its ſound in another conſonant joined with it, ſuch are l, m, n, r.

B, has one unvaried ſound, is uſed before all the vowels, and before the conſonants l and r, as in blame, break. In the following words it is mute, debt, debtor, ſubtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb.

C, is ſounded like ſ before e, i, and y, or before an apoſtrophe, denoting the abſence of e, as in cement, city, cypher, grac'd for graced; but before a, o, u, l, or r, and at the ends of words, it is ſounded hard like k, as in can, coſt, cub, claſs, cruſt, public. It ſhould be obſerved, it has been the cuſtom to add a k to c at the ends of words, but as this deſtroys their analogy, and renders their etymology uncertain, the moderns have juſtly omitted the k. Joined to h, it has a like ſound as ſh, as in church, crutch; but in words derived from the Greek, it is ſounded like k, as in chemiſt, ſcheme, archangel; but when arch is compounded with a word beginning with a conſonant, it has the ſound of the Engliſh ch in church, as in arch-biſhop. In words derived from the French, it is ſounded like ſ, as in machine, chaiſe.

D, has but one uniform ſound, and is uſed before all the vowels, and the conſonants r and w, as draw, dwell.

F, is pronounced before a liquid, as in flame, fright, and has one unvariable ſound, excepting that of is ſometimes pronounced like ov.

G, has two ſounds, that before a, o, u, being hard, as in game, gone, gun; but ſoft before e, i, y, or before an apoſtrophe, when it denotes the abſence of e, as in gender, ginger, gypſy, and judg'd for judged. At the end of a word it is always hard, as in dog, bring. Its ſound before e and i is ſometimes hard, eſpecially in words not derived from the Latin or French, as in give, get, geld, begin, and all their derivatives. For this reaſon it is ſoft in giant, gigantic, gibbet, giblet, giles, gill, gilliflower, gin, ginger, gingle. In words ending with er it is hard, as in anger, finger. When it is followed by u, or an h, at the beginning of a word, its ſound is hard, as in guide, guilt, ghoſt; but when g is followed by b in the middle, and ſometimes at the end of words, it is ſilent; thus though is pronounced tho'; right is pronounced rite, and ſought is pronounced ſawte. Otherwiſe, at the end of words, it has the ſound of f, as in cough, enough; but the laſt word is ſometimes ſounded, according to the preceding rule, enow.

H, is a note of aſpiration, and ſhews, that the vowel following it muſt be pronounced with a ſtrong emiſſion of breath, as in hat, horn. It generally is pronounced in this manner at the beginning of words, excepting in heir, herb, hoſtler, honour, humble, honeſt, humour, and their derivatives.

J. This conſonant is ſounded like a ſoft g, and might very properly be ſubſtituted inſtead of the g, when ſounded ſoft, to prevent miſtakes in foreigners; as in jeſt.

K, has the ſound of c hard, and where, according to the analogy of our language, the c would be ſoft; as in kept, ſkirt, king: ſkeptic ſhould likewiſe in Engliſh be written with a k, not a c, as ſceptic. This letter is never doubled, but has c often before it, to ſhorten the preceding vowel, as in cock.

L. The ſound of this letter is the ſame in Engliſh as in other languages. At the end of monoſyllables it is doubled, as in kill, fall; becauſe theſe words were originally written kille, falle; but in compound words one of the l's is ſuppreſſed, as in ſkilful. In ſome words it is mute, as in calf, half, could, would, talk, ſalmon, falcon; could and would are however ſeldom pronounced cou'd, wou'd, but by Londoners; and ſalmon, falcon drop the ſound of l in alluſion to the French pronunciation of them, from whence they are derived.

M, has always the ſame ſound.

N, has always the ſame invariable ſound, and after an m at the end of a word is mute; as in condemn, hymn.

P, has always the ſame ſound; when followed by s, and between m and t, it is mute; as in damn, condemn, tempt, pronounced dam, condem, temt.

When joined with h, in words derived from the Greek, it has the ſound of f, as in philoſophy, Philip, pronounced filoſophy, Filip.

Q, in Engliſh, as well as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has then the ſame ſound as our Saxon anceſtors expreſſed by cw; as in quaver, queen, quire. But in words derived from the French, it retains the French ſound, and is pronounced like k, as in conquer, liquor, riſque, chequer.

R, has the ſame rough ſnarling ſound as in other languages. In words derived from the Greek, it is joined with h, eſpecially in ſuch as had the r aſpirated, as in myrrh, catarrh, or rheum. Re at the end of words derived from the Greek or French, is pronounced like er weak, as in theatre, metre, maſſacre, ſepulchre.

S, has naturally a ſharp hiſſing ſound, as in ſiſter; when it ends a word, it is ſounded like z; as in bees, pies; unleſs in this, thus, us, yes; in thoſe words which are derived from the Latin, as ſurplus, rebus, and in adjectives which end in us, and are derived from the French, as in gracious, religious; where we ſhould remark that the o is ſilent, thoſe words being ſounded as if written gracius, religius. S has likewiſe the ſound of z before ion, if a vowel goes before it, as in infuſion, but that of ſ ſharp, if it follow a conſonant; as in converſion. Before e mute it has the ſound of z, as in adviſe; before y at the end of words, as in roſy, and in boſom, deſire, priſon, and its derivatives, preſent, damſel, caſement. It is mute or not pronounced in iſle, iſland, viſcount, demeſne.

A ſingle ſ ſeldoms ends any word except the third perſon of verbs, the genitive caſe, and the plurals of nouns, the pronouns this, his, ours, yours, us, the adverb thus, and words derived from the Latin. Where it would cloſe a word, we generally add an e final; as in houſe, or elſe uſe a ſi, as in graſs, formerly written graſſe.

T, is ſounded hard before a, e, o, u, and i, provided a vowel does not follow low i, in which caſe it has the ſound of ſ, as in ſalvation; but when ſ goes before it, it retains its hard ſound, as in queſtion; as it does likewiſe in derivatives from words ending in y, as mighty, mightier. When joined with h, it has two ſounds, the one ſoft, as in all the pronouns, relative words and conjunctions, in all words between two vowels, eſpecially ſuch as end in ther, as father, and between r and a vowel, as in burthen. In other words, it is ſounded hard, as in the prepoſitions with, without, through; and in the words think, thrive, thigh, throng, death, faith, &c. and in the adjectives thick, thin. Where it is ſoftened at the end of a word, an e final ſhould be added; as in breath, th is ſounded hard, but in breathe, ſoft.

V, has a ſound much reſembling an f ſoft; as in vain, it being in the Iſlandiſh or Runic alphabet diſtinguiſhed from f only by a diacritical point.

W. It will not be amiſs to obſerve, that this letter is borrowed from the Gothic or Saxon, and receives its name, though improperly, from its ſhape, not from its ſound; had we retained wen, the antient Saxon name for it, it would have facilitated the underſtanding its power. The Latins, Greeks, and ſeveral modern languages, have no letter that anſwers it. At the beginning of a ſyllable, it ſomewhat reſembles a v, as in water, but ſounded rather broader. It is uſed before all the vowels except u; this exception ſeems to have been introduced when the Gallic uu were introduced, inſtead of the Saxon w, for it ſeems odd to have three w's together. In the Saxon, u follows the w, as often as any other vowel, as in wuce, wund. As we write w as one letter and not as uu, we might have u after w, as well as formerly; but being too ſtrict imitators of Gallic nicety, and at the ſame time forgetting the ſources of our language, the u, which follows the w in the original words, has been changed into o, oo, ou, and we have done all we can to render the derivation of our words impracticable. At firſt indeed writers and printers were content with uu in ſuch words, writing uunder, from the Saxon wundor; but afterwards thinking a vowel was ſtill wanting, even when the vv were printed cloſe as w, they thought it neceſſary to add another vowel to ſupply the ſeeming omiſſion, and produced the word wonder. When w is uſed before the letter h, it is really ſounded after it, as in when, which, what; which our Saxon anceſtors even ſpelt in this manner, writing hwen, hwich, hwat. In whore, and wholeſome, which are pronounced hore, holeſome, the w is ſilent.

X, begins no Engliſh word; but when uſed, has the ſound of ks.

Y, is uſed as a conſonant before a vowel or diphthong.

Z, begins no Engliſh word; when uſed it has the ſound of ſ hard, as its name expreſſes.

CHAP. III. Of ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the derivation of one word from another, and the various modifications by which each word is diverſified.

Words are either primitive or derivative. A primitive word is that which is derived from no other word in our language, as ball. A derivative word is that which comes from ſome other word in our language, as a fiſher, from fiſh.

Words are again divided into eight ſorts, as

Noun	Adverb
Pronoun	Conjunction
Verb	Prepoſition
Participle	Interjection

The firſt four, viz. noun, pronoun, verb, and participle, are declined; but the laſt four, adverb, conjunction, prepoſition, and interjection, are not declined.

Declenſion

Declenſion means the altering of the laſt ſyllable of a word.

A noun is a general word made uſe of to convey the idea of any thing, or the quality belonging to it; and is therefore ſubdivided into ſubſtantive and adjective.

A noun ſubſtantive is the name of the thing itſelf, as a man.

A noun adjective is a word that expreſſes only the qualities or properties of a thing, as good, bad, wiſe.

To diſtinguiſh a ſubſtantive from an adjective, join a verb to it, and if it makes ſenſe, it is a ſubſtantive, but on the contrary, an adjective. Thus, if I join the verb ſee to a man, it makes this ſentence, I ſee a man, which is ſenſe, and the word man is conſequently a ſubſtantive; but if we join ſee to wiſe, we form this ſentence, I ſee a wiſe, which being nonſenſe, the word wiſe is conſequently an adjective.

Subſtantives are ſubdivided into proper, or common.

A noun ſubſtantive common, or appellative, is a word which ſtands for an univerſal, or a whole rank of beings of the ſame kind, as man, bird, river, trout, eel.

A noun ſubſtantive proper, is a word that belongs to ſome individual, and diſtinguiſhes it from others of the ſame kind; as Anne, is a name which belongs to a particular woman, and is uſed to diſtinguiſh her from others of the ſame ſex or family.

NUMBER. Subſtantives may likewiſe be conſidered as applied to one or more, which is called number, and diſtinguiſhed into ſingular or plural.

The ſingular number is uſed when we ſpeak but of one perſon or thing, as I, thou, he, a ſtick.

The plural number is uſed when we ſpeak of more than one perſon or thing, as we, ye, they, boys, ſticks.

The plural number in Engliſh is generally made by adding an s to the ſingular of the ſubſtantive, as ſtick makes ſticks, and boy makes boys, in the plural. The plural number therefore has no more ſyllables than the ſingular, thus boy has but one ſyllable, and boys has but one likewiſe. In the ſingular father is a diſſyllable, and the plural fathers is a diſſyllable likewiſe.

But when the ſingular ends in ve, ze, ce, or ge, the plural has a ſyllable more than the ſingular, thus cage makes cages, maze makes mazes, face makes faces, and horſe makes horſes.

When the ſingular ends in ch, ſh, ſſ, or x, an e is put before the s in the plural, thus,

Church	makes	Churches
Bluſh		Bluſhes
Witneſs		Witneſſes
Box		Boxes

Words that end in f or fe, make the plural by changing f and fe into ves, thus,

Singular		Plural	Singular		Plural
Calf	makes	Calves	Sheaf	makes	Sheaves
Half		Halves	Shelf		Shelves
Knife		Knives	Self		Selves
Leaf		Leaves	Thief		Thieves
Loaf		Loaves	Wife		Wives
			Wolf		Wolves

But the following words hoof, roof, grief, dwarf, chief, handkerchief, relief, ſcarf, wharf, reproof, ſtrife, ſcoff, ſtuff, and, generally ſpeaking, words ending in ff, make the plural according to the general rule, i. e. by the addition of s; thus muff makes muffs, and hoof makes hoofs; but ſtaff makes ſtaves.

Nouns ending in y make their plural in ies, becauſe they were formerly written with ie in the ſingular, as appears from Chaucer's prologue of the Teſtament of Love, "The names of hem in the boke of perpetual memorie "in virtue and pece are writen." According to this rule, glory makes glories, and frailty, frailties, in the plural.

The following words form their plurals irregularly;

Singular		Plural		Singular		Plural
Die	makes	Dice *		Foot	makes	Feet †
Mouſe		Mice		Tooth		Teeth
Louſe		Lice		Penny		Pence
Gooſe		Geeſe		Man and its compounds		Men

Child makes children, which is an imitation of the Dutch plural. Brother makes brethren, and brothers, which is borrowed from brother, plural of brother in Saxon. At preſent brethren is ſeldom uſed but by divines.

Ox makes oxen, from the Saxon words in a making an in the plural; thus oxa Saxon, makes oxan in the plural.

The following words are uſed in both numbers.

Sheep, boſe, fern, deer, ſwine. Deer retains its form according to the Saxon deor, which being of the fourth declenſion, has the nominatives ſingular and plural the ſame. Swine is a contraction of ſowin; yet it muſt be obſerved, that when ſow is uſed of the female only, we uſe ſows; but when it is a ſpecific name, we uſe only ſwine. Chicken, is uſed likewiſe in both numbers, and formed after the Dutch manner, chick, plural chicken; though Greenwood is of opinion that chicken is ſingular, and chickens the plural; yet this ſeems a miſtake, founded on the errors of the vulgar. We likewiſe ſay five year, but then uſe it as a compound word borrowed from the Saxon fif-gear; and ten pound from tyn pund Saxon, pund in Saxon being of the fourth declenſion, and the ſame in the nominative ſingular and plural: yet it ſhould be obſerved, that ten pounds and five years is better Engliſh on the modern analogy.

As aſhes, bellows, bowels, breeches, entrails, lungs, ſciſſars, ſhears, ſnuffers, tongs, thanks, and wages.

Theſe words have no plural number,

1ſt, The proper names of cities, countries, rivers, mountains; the names of virtues and vices; ſpecific names merely ſuch; thoſe of gold, ſilver, or copper; the names of herbs, excepting nettle, poppy, lilly, colewort, cabbage, &c. 2dly, The names of ſeveral kinds of corn and pulſe, as wheat, rye, barley, darnel, &c. except bean, which makes beans, and pea, peas. Bread, wine, beer, ale, honey, oil, milk, butter, want the plural; but when ſome of theſe ſtand for individuals, or ſeveral ſorts, they then admit of a plural, as wines, oils.

A ſpecific name is that which ſignifies a whole ſpecies or kind, and may be diſtinguiſhed, in our language, both from its having no plural, and likewiſe from its never being uſed in the ſingular with a before it; for we never

* This plural ſeems rather owing to falſe ſpelling than a departure from analogy, for the plural, according to the general rule, is dies, which is pronounced much the ſame as dice; and the ſpelling it in the preſent manner might be in order to diſtinguiſh it from dies, the third perſon ſingular of the verb die.

† Feet is borrowed from fet, the irregular plural of fot, Saxon. Pence is a contraction from penny, plural pennies, pennes, pens, or pence. Men is borrowed from man, Saxon, whoſe plural is irregular, and makes men.

ſay a fleſh, a gold, but fleſh, or gold; and when a word is uſed both for an individual and a ſpecific name, we leave out the article a, when we uſe it ſpecifically; thus we ſay a man was killed, when we uſe the word man of an individual; but man is mortal, or man fell, when we uſe it ſpecifically.

CHAP. IV. The Engliſh NOUNS, with reſpect to Caſes.

IN order to denote the different relations in which one word ſtands to another, the learned languages have made a change in their laſt ſyllables, but as we find no other change in Engliſh nouns, excepting in the genitive, we may ſay we have no other caſe; for excepting in the genitive, the reſpect which things bear to one another, is in our language expreſſed by means of certain words called prepoſitions, ſuch are of, to, for, from, with, by.

In Engliſh the genitive is expreſſed by adding an 's to the nominative, according as the pronunciation requires; as the king's prerogative; Charles's wain. This caſe is generally diſtinguiſhed by prefixing an apoſtrophe before or over the s.

The ablative is expreſſed in Engliſh by the prepoſition with, from, or by; as, "He cut him with a knife." "Engraved by Strange." "He roſe "from the dead."

CHAP. V. Of GENDER.

THE want of that variety of caſes to be found in other languages is an advantage, by which our language is freed from perplexity: but it boaſts ſtill of another, in which no other language but the Chineſe can rival it; I mean, that the Engliſh nouns admit of no difference of gender.

Gender is the diſtinction of ſex.

Sex is either male or female; inanimate things are neither, and therefore ſaid to be of the neuter gender.

The Engliſh have four ways of diſtinguiſhing the ſex.

I. By different words.

Male	Female	Male	Female
Batchelor	Maid, or Virgin	King	Queen
Boar	Sow	Lad	Laſs
Boy	Girl	Lord	Lady
Brother	Siſter	Maſter	Miſtreſs
Buck	Doe	Milter	Spawner
Bull	Cow	Nephew	Niece, &c.

II. When both ſexes are comprehended under one word, we add an adjective to the word to diſtinguiſh the ſex. Thus the word child, being applied to both ſexes, we add the words male or female; as a male child, a female child.

III. Sometimes we add another ſubſtantive to the word, as a man-ſervant for the male ſex, a maid-ſervant for the female. Theſe words being generally uſed to diſtinguiſh the ſex of nouns, are applied only to rational creatures. To diſtinguiſh the ſex of birds, we add the words cock, or hen, as a cock-ſparrow, a hen-ſparrow.

But the common words we make uſe of to diſtinguiſh the ſex are he and ſhe; when we ſpeak of the male ſex, we uſe the word he, as a he bear; when we ſpeak of the female ſex, we uſe the word ſhe, as a ſhe bear; but when we ſpeak of a thing that is neither male or female, we uſe it; for example, ſpeaking of ſnow, we do not ſay, he, or ſhe melts, but it melts; and when we uſe a word which leaves the ſex undetermined, we add it likewiſe. "Do not wake "the child, it is aſleep."

Some words, which expreſs inanimate things, and therefore ſhould be followed by it, are uſed figuratively, and ſerving formerly for hieroglyphics to ſignify perſons, are therefore ſpoken of as being of ſome ſex: thus of the ſun, we ſay, "His going forth is from the end of the heaven." Of the moon, "In borrowed majeſty ſhe walks abroad:" --- and of the church, "She "hath nouriſhed her children."

IV. We likewiſe diſtinguiſh the female ſex in ſome nouns by adding eſs to the male, or changing the termination into eſs; and this method of diſtinction we have borrowed from the Normans, as in abbedeſſe; though we might trace it ſtill higher, either to the Latin termination iſſa, or the Greek ις, is, ισσα, iſſa, as προφητις, prophetis, Greek, propheteſſe, French, profeteſſe, Old Engliſh; and at preſent propheteſs. Thus likewiſe βασιλευς, baſileus, Greek, for king, forms βασιλις, baſilis, or βασιλισσα, baſiliſſa, for the female, which is a queen.

Male	Female	Male	Female
Abbot	Abbeſs	Jew	Jeweſs
Actor	Actreſs	Lion	Lioneſs
Adulterer	Adultereſs	Prince	Princeſs, &c.

CHAP. VI. Of the ADJECTIVE.

THE Engliſh adjective is entirely undeclined, having neither caſe, gender, or number, but being added to the ſubſtantives in all relations without any change: thus we ſay, a good father, a good mother, good ſilver, good men.

The Compariſon of Adjectives.

Compariſon is the act of ſetting two or more things together in the mind, in order to find out their agreement or diſagreement; but by grammatical compariſon, we mean comparing two or more qualities, whereby we are able to affirm, that the one is more or leſs, or poſſeſſed of any quality in the higheſt degree: ſo of three ſoft things, we, by comparing them together, find three degrees of ſoftneſs, the one being ſofter than the firſt, and the third the ſofteſt of the three. Hence we have three degrees of compariſon, viz. the poſitive, the comparative and the ſuperlative.

The poſitive expreſſes the quality of a thing ſimply, without any compariſon included, as ſoft.

The comparative heightens or leſſens the ſenſe of the poſitive, and denotes that the thing compared enjoys any quality in a greater or leſs degree than the thing it is compared with; as this wool is ſofter, or ſhe is a fairer woman.

The ſuperlative heightens the ſenſe of the poſitive in the higheſt, or diminiſhes it to the loweſt degree; or elſe ſhews that a perſon or thing poſſeſſes any quality to ſuch a degree, as nothing can go beyond or equal them; as the wiſeſt man, i. e. one who has not his equal, or cannot be ſurpaſſed in wiſdom.

The comparative degree is formed or made by adding er to the poſitive; thus to form the comparative of fair we add er, which makes fairer. But if the poſitive ends with an e final we add only r; thus, to form the comparative of wiſe we add only an r, which makes wiſer. This method of forming the comparative we borrowed from the Saxons.

The ſuperlative is formed by adding eſt to the poſitive; thus, to form the ſuperlative of fair we add eſt, which makes faireſt; but, in caſe the poſitive ends with an e mute, we then only add ſt, as we obſerved in the comparative; for if the poſitive be wiſe we only add ſt, which forms the ſuperlative wiſeſt.

But

But ſuch adjectives as are borrowed from the Latin, and ſuch as end in

ain	cal	ous	ant
ive	en	ent	ible
ly	leſs	id	ſome
ry	al
able	ing	iſh	ed

providing they be words of more than one ſyllable, form their comparative by putting more before the poſitive, and their ſuperlative by prefixing moſt; thus the comparative of certain, is more certain, and the ſuperlative moſt certain. Able and handſome are exceptions to this rule, making abler, handſomer, in the comparative, and ableſt, handſomeſt, in the ſuperlative.

Some adjectives likewiſe are compared by uſing better to expreſs the comparative, and beſt to denote the ſuperlative; thus learned, in the comparative, makes better learned, and in the ſuperlative beſt learned.

Big, hot, and fit, double the laſt conſonant in their comparative and ſuperlative degrees, in order to retain the ſhort ſound of the poſitive; thus, big makes bigger, biggeſt; hot, hotter, hotteſt; and fit makes fitter and fitteſt.

The compariſon of the following adjectives are irregular.

Poſitive	Comparative	Superlative
Good	Better	Beſt
Bad, Evil, Ill	Worſe	Worſt
Little	Leſs	Leaſt

This irregularity Greenwood ſuppoſes owing to borrowing words from other languages; but ſurely that learned man could not be ignorant that this irregularity is to be found even in the languages from whence they are borrowed. Thus good, god, or bet, in Saxon, makes bettera in the comparative, and betſt in the ſuperlative. Good, Iſlandic, makes betre in the comparative, and beſte in the ſuperlative. Ill, the feminine of illur, Iſl. makes verre in the comparative, and veſt in the ſuperlative. Little is likewiſe irregular in the Saxon, as lytel makes læs in the comparative, and læſt in the ſuperlative.

The following words have not the comparative degree; middle, middlemoſt; very, verieſt.

Some adjectives make their ſuperlative by adding moſt; thus fore, from the Saxon for or forma, makes former, and foremoſt. From neath, obſolete, comes neather, and neathermoſt; but hind has two ſuperlatives, as hind, hinder, hindermoſt, and hindmoſt; yet it muſt be remembered that hindmoſt is not ſo proper as hindermoſt. Late has two comparatives as well as two ſuperlatives, for from late comes later and latter; lateſt or laſt.

Moſt is ſometimes added to a ſubſtantive when it implies compariſon, as topmoſt, ſouthmoſt.

CHAP. VII. Of the PRONOUNS.

AS too frequent repetition of the ſame words is both diſagreeable and inconvenient, we make uſe of ſeveral words to ſupply the place of ſuch words, which are therefore called pronouns.

A pronoun is a word that may be uſed inſtead of a noun ſubſtantive; thus, inſtead of my own name, I ſay, I; inſtead of your name, I ſay, you; and inſtead of another man or woman's name, I ſay, he or ſhe.

As all diſcourſe may be confined to theſe three heads; 1ſt, in ſpeaking of ourſelves: 2dly, in ſpeaking to another; and 3dly, in ſpeaking of another; theſe three heads are therefore called by the name of perſons. For

1ſt, When

1ſt, When I ſpeak of myſelf, I uſe the word I; and when ſeveral ſpeak of themſelves, they uſe the word we; which words, I and we, are of the firſt perſon.

2dly, When we ſpeak to another, we uſe the word thou or you; but when we ſpeak to more than one, we uſe the word ye or you; and the words, thou or ye, are of the ſecond perſon.

3dly, In ſpeaking of another of the male ſex, we ſay he; but if of the female ſex, we ſay ſhe; and ſhould we ſpeak of any thing that is neither male nor female, we ſay it; and if we ſpeak of more things than one, let them be of the male or female ſex, or even of no ſex, we always uſe they. The words he, ſhe, it, and they are of the third perſon. Hence the

	Singular	Plural
1ſt	Perſon, I	We
2d	Perſon, Thou, or you	You, or ye
3d	Perſon, He, ſhe, it	They

All other nouns when ſpoken of, are of the third perſon; ſingular when one only is meant, and plural when we ſpeak of more than one.

Indeed though we ſpeak only of a ſingle perſon, we uſe you, which is plural; but never ye. So likewiſe out of complaiſance, we frequently uſe your for thy, and yours for thine. We likewiſe uſe you inſtead of ye, ſeldom placing ye before the verb, though it be the nominative or foregoing ſtate, unleſs by way of diſtinction, familiarity, or contempt; as, "Ye are the men." Again, which is likewiſe againſt the rules of grammar, we commonly uſe ye after the verb or a prepoſition; as, "I will give ye a ſpecimen;" or, "I will take it "away from ye."

When pronouns are declined, they are ſaid to have a foregoing ſtate and a following ſtate.

The foregoing ſtate, is that in which a word is uſed before a verb; and the following ſtate that in which it is uſed after the verb.

From theſe pronouns are derived others, called pronouns poſſeſſive, ſo called becauſe they denote poſſeſſion; from me comes my and mine; from thee, thy and thine; from us, our and ours; and from you, your and yours. Theſe pronouns are ſometimes uſed to expreſs the cauſe or author of a thing; as, "This "is your doing;" i. e. you are the cauſe of this. Again, "This is my "book;" that is, I am the owner of this book. Theſe poſſeſſive pronouns have no caſes.

In order to render the declenſion of pronouns, and the proper uſe of them more plain, we have ſubjoined, from Dr. Wallis,

A TABLE

A TABLE of all the PRONOUNS in the ſeveral States.

			The foregoing State	The following State	Their Poſſeſſives to be uſed: With a Subſtantive	Their Poſſeſſives to be uſed: Without a Subſtantive
1 Perſon	Sing.		I	Me	My	Mine

		Neu.	It	It	Its	Its
	Plur.		They	Them	Their	Theirs
The Interrogative	Of Perſons		Who	Whom	Whoſe	Whoſe
	Of Things		What		Whereof

Pronouns are likewiſe divided into ſubſtantives and adjectives. The pronouns ſubſtantive are, I, thou, he or ſhe in both numbers, together with himſelf. The adjectives are, he, ſhe, it, mine, thy, thine, her.

Who is an interrogative, ſo called from its being uſed in aſking a queſtion; and is uſed only when we ſpeak of perſons.

This, that, and which are adjectives, though commonly reckoned to be pronouns, for they are not put to ſupply the place of ſubſtantives, but are joined with them, as, "This man." "That book." And if they occur at any time without ſubſtantives, their ſubſtantives are then underſtood. This and that are called demonſtratives, becauſe they ſhew what particular perſon or thing you mean. This makes theſe, in the plural, and that makes thoſe. Which is called an interrogative, when uſed in aſking a queſtion, and a relative when it has relation to ſome ſubſtantive expreſſed or underſtood; as "Here is the book, which (book) you loſt." It is the ſame in both numbers, and is uſed only when we ſpeak of things.

CHAP. VIII. Of VERBS.

A Verb is a word that ſignifies being, action, or ſuffering; thus, to ſit, ſignifies being in ſome poſture: to fight, ſignifies action; and to be beloved, ſignifies the paſſion of a perſon. Such verbs as ſignify merely being, are eſſential verbs; thoſe that ſignify doing or action, are active verbs; and thoſe that ſignify ſuffering, are called verbs paſſive. Verbs that ſignify condition or habit, are called neuter. In Engliſh we have, ſtrictly ſpeaking, no paſſive verbs, but expreſs ſuch verbs by means of auxiliary words.

As actions may be conſidered as being paſt, or preſent, Verbs have tenſes, by which theſe ſenſes are expreſſed: The Engliſh indeed have but two tenſes or times; viz. the preſent, and the preter time; the verb having different endings only to expreſs them.

The preſent tenſe, or time which now is, is expreſſed by the verb itſelf, as, I burn.

The preter tenſe or time, called the preterite, is commonly made by adding ed to the preſent tenſe, as burn-ed: but if the preſent tenſe ends in e, it is made by adding d only, as love, loved.

Some verbs whoſe preſent tenſe end in d or t, have their preter and preſent the ſame, as read, lead; but it is to be obſerved, that in pronunciation we make a diſtinction, the preſent being pronounced long, and the preter ſhort; on which account ſeveral authors of note have choſen, for diſtinction's ſake, to write the preter as pronounced; amongſt which is Bolingbroke, who writes the preters of lead and read, led and red.

As actions are to be affirmed of ourſelves, to others, or of others, verbs are ſaid to have perſons, which are diſtinguiſhed by prefixing the pronouns perſonal to them in Engliſh, as

Singular	Plural
1, I burn	We burn
2, Thou burneſt	Ye burn
3, He or ſhe burns	They burn

In other languages either of the perſons are expreſſed by an alteration made in the end of the verb; but in Engliſh this takes place only in the ſingular number of the preſent and preter tenſes, according to the ſubſequent ſcheme, wherein the endings of each perſon are expreſt.

Preſent tenſe ſingular	Preter tenſe ſingular
Perſons 1, The verb	ed
2, eſt	edſt or dſt or d after e final
3, eth or s	ed

As the Engliſh differs from other languages with reſpect to its tenſes, ſo it does likewiſe with reſpect to the moods.

CHAP. IX. Of Moods.

A Mood is a method made uſe of to expreſs the manner, poſſibility, or neceſſity of an action, together with the inclination of the agent. In the learned languages, theſe different circumſtances are expreſſed by the alterations made in the endings of their verbs; but as the Engliſh does not admit of ſuch a change, it is evident, that it has no moods. The manner, in which we expreſs theſe circumſtances of action, is by means of auxiliary words, and by the place of the nominative To expreſs the poſſibility of a thing, we uſe can; to convey the idea of neceſſity, we uſe muſt, or ought; to expreſs the liberty of the ſpeaker, we uſe may; to denote the inclination, we uſe will, or would; and to ſignify command, permiſſion, entreaty, or exhortation or doubt, we place the ſubſtantive after the verb: as "fight the French; do I underſtand?"

CHAP. X. Of Participles.

As participles are joined to auxiliary or helping verbs, it will be proper to premiſe ſomething concerning them, that the auxiliary verbs themſelves may be better underſtood.

A participle is derived from a verb, and receives its name from partaking both of the nature of a verb and of an adjective: it partakes of the nature of a verb, becauſe it ſignifies being, doing and ſuffering, as a verb does; and partakes of the nature of an adjective, becauſe it will not make ſenſe of itſelf: it ſignifies barely a quality, and is joined to a ſubſtantive as an adjective is: thus, in the ſentence, "a loving child," the word loving is a participle, and ſignifies action, as the verb love itſelf does: it partakes likewiſe of the nature of an adjective, becauſe when the word loving ſtands by itſelf, it requires ſome other word to determine its ſenſe, and when joined to the ſubſtantive child, makes a complete ſentence.

There are two participles; one of which is active, and the other paſſive.

The active participle is made by adding ing to the verb, as burn, burn-ing; but if the verb ends in e mute, the e is omitted, as in write, writing; this is called the active participle, becauſe it ſignifies action.

The paſſive participle is made by adding ed, t, or en to the verb; as burn, burned; lend, lent; beat, beaten. This is called the paſſive participle, becauſe when joined with the verb to be, it makes up the whole paſſive voice.

The auxiliary verbs are either perfect or defective.

CHAP. XI. Of the defective auxiliary VERBS.

A Defective auxiliary verb is that which is not uſed but in its own or the preter tenſe, has no participles, and admits of no helping verbs to be put before it: of this kind are do, will, ſhall, may, can, with their preter tenſes did, would, ſhould, might, could, or muſt.

When do is uſed as an auxiliary verb, it emphatically denotes the preſent time; and did the preter. Thus, I burn, or I burned, is more emphatical or ſtrong when we ſay I do burn, or I did burn. Do and did are formed thus;

	Singular	Plural
Perſons	1 I do	We do
	2 Thou doſt, or you do	Ye do, or you do
	3 He doth, or does	They do
Perſons	1 I did	We did
	2 Thou didſt, or you did	Ye did, or you did
	3 He did	They did

Shall or Will.

I ſhall, thou ſhalt, or you ſhall, he ſhall. Plural, We ſhall, ye ſhall, or you ſhall, they ſhall.

I will, thou wilt, or you will, he will. Plural, We will, ye or you will, they will.

To diſtinguiſh ſhall from will, though they are both uſed to expreſs ſomething future, it will be neceſſary to obſerve, that in the firſt perſon ſhall expreſſes a future action; but will promiſes or threatens; thus I ſhall proceed, or we ſhall proceed, implies, that our proceeding is ſomething future; but when we ſay, I will beat you, or I will pay you, I promiſe or threaten beating or payment. Again, in the ſecond or third perſons, ſhall commands, promiſes, and threatens; but will barely foretels: thus when we ſay, you ſhall go, we command a perſon to go; when we ſay, you ſhall have your money, we promiſe to pay a perſon; and when we ſay, he ſhall be hanged, we threaten: but when we ſay, he will be beaten, they will run away, we only foretel ſomething that may happen.

Shall, from the old verb ſhalle, or ſcealdan, Saxon, makes ſhould, which is thus formed, I ſhould, thou ſhouldſt, or you ſhould, he ſhould. Plural, We ſhould, ye or you ſhould, they ſhould.

Will, in the preter tenſe, makes would, from the old Saxon verb wolle or wold, and is declined thus, I would, thou wouldſt or you would, he would. Plural, We would, ye or you would, they would.

In order to prevent impropriety, it ſhould be obſerved, that though both would and ſhould are uſed to denote what was, or had been to come, yet would is only uſed to intimate the will or intention of the doer; as, I would write, i. e. I am willing to write; but I ſhould, denotes the bare futurity, or that the thing will be, and the propriety of doing it; as, I ſhould write, i. e. it is proper for me to write.

May is declined thus, I might, thou mightſt or you might, he might. Plural, we might, ye or you might, they might.

May comes from the Saxon magan, to be able, and might, its preter, from miht the preter in the Saxon.

I may, thou mayſt or you may, he may, we may, ye or you may, they may.

Can forms could, in the preter, and is thus declined; I can, thou canſt or you can, he can. Plural, We can, ye or you can, they can.

I could, thou couldſt, &c. like ſhould.

Though both can and could intimate the power of doing a thing, yet they differ in this, that may and might implies the right, lawfulneſs, or poſſibility of a thing; as I might write, implies it right, lawful, or poſſible for me to write. But can or could are uſed only to imply ſufficiency of power or ſtrength for doing a thing; as, I can write, or, I could write; i. e. I had power ſufficient, or was able to write.

Muſt, which comes from the Saxon moſt, and ought, are thus declined. I muſt, thou muſt, &c. without any variation in the perſons. I ought, thou oughtſt or you ought, he ought, &c. both theſe words imply neceſſity or duty. Muſt is uſed with relation both to the future and preſent time; but ought to the preſent time only, but if have follows either muſt or ought, they then relate to the time paſt; as, I ought to have done it, i. e. it is fit I ſhould have done it at ſome time paſt.

Of the perfect helping or auxiliary VERBS.

The perfect helping verbs are have, am, or be: they are called perfect verbs, becauſe they may be joined with other auxiliary verbs, and are uſed in moſt of the tenſes. Theſe verbs we have borrowed from the Saxon and Gothic languages. When have is uſed as an auxiliary, it denotes the time in which any paſt action was done, and is thus declined; I have, thou haſt, he hath. Plural, We have, ye have, they have. Its perfect is had, and is declined after the following manner; I had, thou hadſt, or you had, he had. Plural, We had, &c. When had is prefixt to another verb, it denotes that the action is juſt paſt; as, I have dined, i. e. the action of dining is juſt paſt. Had, denotes, that an action was paſt before another which was paſt likewiſe; as, When Peter came to my houſe, I had dined; i. e. the action of dining was paſt, before that of Peter's arrival, though paſt likewiſe. Had is likewiſe uſed to ſignify the time paſt of an action not done, but intended to be done; as, I had gone thither, but Peter prevented me; i. e. the action of going thither was intended, and would have been paſt, had it not been for Peter's prevention. In this ſenſe the ſecond branch of the ſentence begins with but, as in the example produced. When ſhall or will is added to have, it denotes the time that is not, but will be paſt; as, I ſhall have burned it, I will have tranſcribed it an hour hence.

As the Engliſh, properly ſpeaking, have no verbs paſſive, this defect is ſupplied by adding am or be, to the participle paſſive: thus live, the participle paſſive, becomes a kind of verb paſſive when joined with am, as I am loved. But as am is a very irregular verb, it will not be unneceſſary to add the manner in which it is declined in the preſent and preter tenſes. In the preſent tenſe it is declined thus; ſingular, I am, thou art, thou art, or you are, he is: plural, we are, &c. or, I be, thou be'ſt, he be; plural, we be, ye be, &c. In the preter, we decline thus, I was, thou waſt, or you were, he was; plural, we were, ye were, or you were, &c. or I were, thou wert, he were; plural, we were, ye were, they were.

This verb makes to be in the infinitive, the active participle is being; and the paſſive participle been be, be'ſt and were wert, are generally uſed after the conjunctions if, that, although, &c. as, if I be then at home; although I ſhould be at home; admitting that I were your brother. Be is uſed after let; as let him be quiet. The irregular verbs are ſo numerous, that a particular detail of them would take up too much room in this treatiſe; but as this omiſſion is already ſupplied in the ſubſequent ſheets, we may be excuſed for not producing them here. The reader, whether a native or a foreigner, whether male or female, whether learned or unlearned, may eaſily comprehend what has been delivered in the foregoing pages, and be abundantly guarded by them, either from a vitious pronunciation, or an impropriety of ſtyle.

Royal Engliſh Dictionary.

A. The firſt letter of the alphabet in all the known languages, excepting the Æthiopic, in which it is the thirteenth. The reaſons aſſigned for its priority are, that it is the firſt and eaſieſt pronounced by children in their infancy. It is one of the five vowels in the Engliſh language, and has three different ſounds, viz. the ſlender, open, and broad. A ſlender, peculiar to the Engliſh, reſembles the French e maſculine, or their a in pais; as alſo in the Engliſh words place, face, and in all thoſe which terminate in ation, as nation. A open, like the a of the Italians, is ſounded in father. A broad, is ſounded in talk and walk, like the au in pauſe. A is ſhort in glaſs and fancy, and is generally made long by an e final as plane, or by the addition of an i, as plain. When ſet before nouns of the ſingular number, it denotes one, as a man, i. e. one man; or ſignifies ſomething indefinite, as, a man may paſs this way, that is, any man. Before a word beginning with a vowel, we write an, as an ox, and likewiſe before an h ſilent, as an herb, but when the h is ſounded, we then write a, as a horſe. Before a participle it denotes ſome action not yet finiſhed, as, I am a walking. Formerly it was a contraction of at, as Thomas a Becket, for at Becket. Sometimes it ſignifies to, as, "a hunting Cloe went," in Prior. It has likewiſe a peculiar ſignification implying each, as, he gains a hundred pounds a year. In abbreviations, with a ſtroke over it thus, [A] it ſtood for 5000 among the Romans. With Logicians, it denotes an univerſal affirmative propoſition. On the inſcriptions of marbles it ſtands for Auguſtus, ager, aiunt; when double, Auguſti, and when triple, auro, argento, ære, i. e. gold, ſilver, braſs. On the reverſe of ancient medals, it ſignifies that they were ſtruck at Argos, or Athens, on moderns, at Paris. Among merchants, if ſet alone after a bill of exchange, it ſignifies accepted, and is uſed by them to diſtinguiſh their ſets of accounts inſtead of a figure, thus, A, B, C. are inſtead of 1, 2, 3. a, or aa, is uſed by phyſicians inſtead of ana, and ſignifies that the proportions of the ingredients, to which it refers, are to be equal. At the end of words, this letter ſignifies land ſurrounded with waters, and is derived from the Teutonic a or ey, which ſignifies an iſland, as in Swinna. In abbreviations it ſtands likewiſe for Artium, or Artis, as A. B. artium bacalaureus, or Batchelor of Arts, when applied to time, for Anno, as A. M. anno Mundi, or the year of the world.

A'AM, S. a meaſure made uſe of in the Low Countries; which, when filled with common water, weighs 288 pounds, and makes 148 $\frac{2}{3}$ Paris pints; in Engliſh it makes the ſame number of pints as it weighs pounds.

AA'RON, S. [, אהרן Heb. Aaron, a mountaineer, or teacher הר Hor, a mountain, or ירה, ierah, teaching] the brother of Moſes, in his eighty-third year joined with him in the miſſion to Pharaoh. The firſt high prieſt of the Jews, in whoſe family that dignity was hereditary.

AARO'NICAL, Adj. [from Aaron] belonging to and deſcended from Aaron.

AB, at the beginning of Engliſh Saxon names, is generally a contraction of abbot, or abban, and ſhews that they either had an abbey, or belonged to one, as Abbingdon.

AB, S. [אב, ab, Heb. father] the eleventh month of the civil, and the fifth of the eccleſiaſtic year of the Jews. It anſwers to our July. On the firſt they faſt, in commemoration of Aaron's death; on the ninth, for the burning of the temple of Solomon by the Chaldeans; and likewiſe on account of Adrian's edict, by which they were baniſhed from Jeruſalem, and on the 18th, becauſe the lamp in the ſanctuary was that night extinguiſhed, in the reign of Ahaz.

ABA'CA, S. [Perſ.] an Indian plant in the Philippines, which is ſown every year, and when gathered is ſteeped in water, and beaten like hemp. The white makes very fine linen, but the grey is uſed only in cordage.

ABACI'STA, S. [old Lat. from Abacus] an arithmetician: a word now out of uſe.

ABA'KE, }

ABA'CTUS, S. [Abactus, Lat. driven away] among the antient phyſicians, a miſcarriage cauſed by art, in contradiſtinction, to abortus, which is natural. This word is now obſolete.

ABA'CUS, S. [Abacus, Lat.] a kind of cupboard, or buffet, now out of uſe.

ABA'CUS, [אבק, Phœnic. Habak, duſt] among Mathematicians, a table covered with duſt, on which the antients uſed to draw their ſchemes, or write their figures; hence.

ABA'CUS Pythagoricus, or Pythagorean abacus, ſignified a table of numbers uſed for the more eaſily conveying the firſt elements of arithmetic, and derived its name from Pythagoras the inventor.

ABA'CUS, S. in Architecture, the uppermoſt member of the capital of a pillar, originally intended to repreſent a ſquare tile laid over a baſket. Its form varies in the different orders. In the Tuſcan, Doric, and antient Ionic, it reſembles the tile its original. In the richer orders, ſuch as the Corinthian and Compoſite, its four ſides are arched, or cut inwards with ſome ornament, as a roſe, or a fiſh's tail, in the middle of each arch.

ABA'DDIRES, S. [Punic, great fathers] certain deities of the Carthaginians.

ABA'DDON, S. [Αβαδδών, Gr, of אבדון Heb. Abadon, a deſtroyer] the name given in the Revelations, to the king of locuſts, an infernal angel; and one of the names of Satan.

ABAF'T, Adv. [Abaftan, Sax. behind] that part of a ſhip which is towards the hinder part or ſtern, including all the ſpace from thence to the fore-maſt, uſually allotted to the maſter and captain. Strictly ſpeaking, the ſtern is only the outſide, but abaft includes both inſide and outſide.

ABAI'SANCE, S. [abaiſer, Fr. to depreſs or bring down] an act of reſpect paid to a perſon by a bow, &c. Now wrote obeiſance, though corruptly, according to Skinner.

To ABA'LIENATE, V. Act. [abalieno, Lat.] in Civil Law, to make that another's, which was our own before; to transfer property from one perſon to another.

ABALIENA'TION, S. [Abalienatio, Lat.] the act of transferring one's right to another. In the Roman law, the things transferred were ſtiled res mancipii, the perſons capable of purchaſing were Roman citizens, or foreigners by particular indulgence; the manner in which it was performed, was either by weights, ready money, or ſurrender before a magiſtrate.

To ABA'ND, V. Act. [contracted from abandon, now obſolete] to forſake, "and Vortigern "enforced the kingdom to aband." Fairy Q.

To ABA'NDON, V. Act. [abandonner, Fr.] from abandonnare, It. to forſake one's colours, bandum in Italian ſignifying an enſign; or rather from the Saxon bana, deſtruction, or a curſe] to give up, reſign, or quit, followed by the particle to or over, before a ſubſtantive; to forſake or caſt off.

ABA'NDONED, Part. Adj. [from abandon] given up, forſaken, deſerted, corrupted in the higheſt degree.

ABA'NDONER, S. [from abandon] the perſon guilty of forſaking or deſerting.

ABA'NDONING, S. [from abandon] the act of deſerting or forſaking.

ABA'NDONMENT, S. [abandonnement, Fr.] the act of forſaking, or the ſtate of a perſon forſaken.

ABA'NDUM, S. [bana, Sax.] in Law, any thing ſequeſtred, confiſcated, or denounced to be forfeited.

ABA'NET, S. [Heb.] a kind of girdle worn by the Jewiſh prieſts.

ABANNI'TION, S. [abannitio, cor. Lat.] a baniſhment for one or two years, on account of manſlaughter.

ABAPTI'STON, S. [Αβαπτιστον, from a not, and βαπτω, Gr. to ſink under] in Surgery, the perforating part of an inſtrument called the trepan, which derives its name from its being contrived ſo, as to be kept from ſinking into the brain, when the ſkull is cut through.

ABA'RCY, S. [from a privative, and Berrtan, Sax. or Barrten, Teuton.] inſatiableneſs: now obſolete.

To ABA'RE, V. Act. [abarian, Sax.] to make bare, diſcover, or diſcloſe: now out of uſe.

ABA'RNARE, V. Act [Sax.] in Law, to inform; to diſcover a ſecret crime to a magiſtrate.

ABARTICULA'TION [from ab from, and articulus, Lat. a joint] an apt conſtruction of the bones, by which they can readily perform their functions, and move ſtrongly and eaſily, as in the thighs, arms, &c.

AB'AS, S. [Perſ.] a weight uſed in Perſia for weighing pearls, being an eighth part lighter than the European carrat.

To ABA'SE, V. Act [abaiſſer, Fr. from bas, low, or baſis, Lat. a foundation] to humble; to bring down; to depreſs; to lower. At ſea, it denotes to ſtrike, take in, or lower a flag, in token of ſubmiſſion.

ABA'SED, Adj. [from abaſe] brought down; humbled. In Heraldry, denotes the top of the wings of any bird to look downwards towards the point of the ſhield, or elſe to be ſhut. A chevron, pale, or bend are abaſed, when their points terminate in, or below the center of the ſhield: an ordinary is abaſed, when below its due ſituation.

ABA'SEMENT, S. [abaiſſement, Fr.] the act of bringing, or ſtate of being brought low; depreſſion.

ABA'SSI, S. [Perſ.] a ſilver coin in Perſia, which takes its name from Shah Abbas H. the inventor. It reſembles the antient pieces of 15 ſols in France, both in figure and ſize, it has great currency in Perſia, and is worth two mammoudis or four chayes; which being nine ſols ſix deniers French, the abaſſi muſt be thirty-eight ſols.

To ABA'SH, V. Act. [verbaſſen. Dutch, to aſtoniſh] to affect with ſudden ſhame, or confuſion; fusion; to dash. "They heard and were abash'd." Milton. The passive is followed by the particles at, or of.

To ABA'TE, V. A. [abbatre, Fr. to beat down] to lessen or diminish; to deject, or depress the mind. In Commerce, to lower or lessen the price of goods either in buying or selling.

To ABA'TE, V. N. to grow less: sometimes used with the particle of before the thing lessened, "abated of their virulence." Dryd.

To ABA'TE, V. in common Law, used both actively and neuterly; actively, it implies to beat, or pull down; to destroy; to defeat, or overthrow a writ on account of some errors, or to step into the possession of land between the former possessor, and his next surviving heir. In the neuter signification, it denotes, to be frustrated, overthrown, or disabled,

To ABA'TE, V. A. in Horsemanship, is applied to the curvets of a horse, which is said to abate his curvets, when he puts his two hind legs upon the ground both at once, observing the same exactness always.

ABA'TELEM, S. [Fr.] the consuls prohibition of trading, issued against all French merchants, in the Levant, who do not discharge their debts, or stand to their bargains.

ABA'TEMENT, S. [from abate] the act of remitting or abating; the state of a person who is deprived of a post; the cause of abating; extenuation. In Law, the act of the abator. In Heraldry, something added to a coat of arms, to diminish its dignity, and is either by diminution, or reversion. Abatement by diminution, is the blemishing any part by adding a mark or stain to the escutcheon. Abatement by reversion, is either by turning the whole escutcheon upside down, or adding another inverted. The marks are eitheir tawney or murry. But the editor of Gwillim explodes the supposition of abatements as a mere chimera, unless in cases of high treason. In Commerce, abatement denotes the allowance given any trader in the price of goods, for promt payment, when he might have insisted on credit. At the custom-house, the word is used for an allowance made for the damage received by the goods delivered in.

AB'ATER, S. [Lat.] one who abates, or allows of an abatement.

ABA'TOR, S. [Lat.] in Law, one who enters on a house or land, void by the death of the last possessor, before the heir takes possession.

ABATU'DE, S. [in old records] any thing diminished.

ABATU'RES, S. [from abate] in Hunting, the sprigs of grass beat down by a stag in his passage.

ABA'WED, Part. [from esbahir, Fr.] abashed, daunted, ashamed. Chaucer. Now out of use.

To ABA'Y, or Abey, [from Buy, the letter a being added, according to Skinner] in Law, to suffer a great penalty; to purchase, or pay dear for. "Ye shall sore abay it." Chauc. now obsolete.

ABB, S. the yarn of a weaver's warp.

ABB-WOOL, S. a compound word used in the same sense as the former.

ABBA', S. [אבא Syr. a scripture word signifying father] the spirit whereby we cry Abba, father. Rom. viii. 15. At first a term of affection both in the Hebrew and Chaldaic, but at length became a title of dignity, very much affected by the Jewish doctors, as is evident from Christ's forbidding his disciples to call any man their father upon earth.

ABBA'ASSIES, S. [Pers.] a silver coin current in Persia. See Abassi.

ABBA'CY, or ABBA'THEY, S. [abbatia, Lat.] the rights, privileges, or jurisdiction of an abbot.

ABBA'TIS, S. in old records, the steward of the stables, or groom.

AB'BER, S. [Brit.] the mouth or fall of a river, prefixed to the names of towns situated in such circumstances.

AB'BESS, S. [abutessa, Lat. from whence abudesse, Sax. and thence by contraction abbesse, Fr.] the superior or governess of a nunnery of women. Though, on account of their sex, they are not allowed to perform the offices of the priesthood, yet they formerly confessed their nuns, and gave blessings; but being deprived of that privilege on account of their abusing it, are now only allowed to commission a priest to act for them.

A'BBEY, S. [Abbatia, Lat. abbaïe, Fr.] a religious house governed by an abbess when appropriated to the fair sex, and by an abbot when inhabited by men. The privileges of these places were formerly so great, that they were exempted from the visitation of the bishop, and were a sanctuary for any malefactor after the commission of the most atrocious crimes. Prior to the reformation, one third of the benefices in England were appropriated to them; and at the dissolution of them by Hen. VIII. there were 190 of them, whose revenues were between 200*l.* and 3500*l. per annum*, (according to bishop Burnet) which, at a medium, must have amounted to 2,853,000*l.* yearly.

A'BBEY-LUBBER, S. [compounded of abbey and lubbed, Dan. fat] a slothful loiterer in a religious house, under pretence of sanctity and austerity, "no huge over-grown abbey-lubber." Span. Fryar.

ABB'INGDON, S. See ABINGDON.

ABBO'T, S. [abud, or abbod, Sax. from אב ab, Heb. father, abbots being stiled patres, or fathers; and Abbesses, matres, or mothers.] the chief or superior of an abbey inhabited by the male sex. They were at first laymen, subject to the bishop, and had no share in ecclesiastical affairs, were men of great plainness and simplicity, and were contented with the government of their own monasteries. At length they were allowed a priest out of their own body, and some of them having rendered themselves conspicuous for their learning, they were called from their obscurity, and affected independency, which was at last granted them, after great opposition. Hence arose the new distinction of abbots mitred or not mitted, crozier'd and not crozier'd. The mitred abbots were exempt from the jurisdiction of the diocesan, and invested with episcopal authority within their several precincts, and in England were lords of parliament, of which Camden reckons twenty-five, as may be seen in Gibson's edition,

p. 242. The unmitred abbots were ſubject to the viſitation of the dioceſan. Crozierd abbots are thoſe who bear the crozier or paſtoral ſtaff, and uncroziered thoſe who did not. It is likewiſe an honorary title borne by magiſtrates, which was antiently aſſumed by perſons, who had not the leaſt concern with a monaſtic life. Thus Philip I. Louis VI. and the dukes of Orleans, were called Abbots of St. Agnan.

A'BBOTS-BURY, S. [from abbad, an abbey, and burig, Sax. a town] a market town of Dorſetſhire, 133 miles from London, ſo called from an abbey of ten monks. The royalty belongs to the family of the Strangeways, now Horners, who have in this place a noble ſwannery, conſiſting of, at leaſt, 7000 ſwans. Its fair for ſheep and toys is on the 10th of July, and its market every Thurſday. The living is a vicarage, and in the gift of the Horner's family.

To ABBRE'VIATE, V. A. [abbreviare, Lat. to ſhorten] to ſhorten, by omiſſion of the leſs important parts; to abridge; to ſhorten by contraction Figuratively, to cut ſhort. "Our "lives are abbreviated into hundreds and ſcores." Brown's Vulg. Err.

ABBREVIA'TION, S. [from abbreviate] the act of ſhortening, by dropping ſome letters of a word, or ſubſtituting marks in their ſtead. Phyſicians make uſe of them both for ſpeed and myſtery. Aq. menth. for Aqua menthæ, mint-water. The Jewiſh rabbies frequently omit all but the initial letters, which dean Swift ſeems ludicrouſly to allude to in the editions of his works publiſhed by himſelf, which are ſubſcribed by J. S. D. S. P. D. in length, Jonathan Swift, Dean of St. Patrick's Dublin.

ABBREVIA'TOR, S. [abbreviateur, Fr.] one who ſhortens, or abridges.

ABBRE'VIATURE, S. [abbreviate] a mark uſed for the ſake of ſhortening, as D for five hundred. Figuratively, a compendium, or abridgment. "An excellent abbreviature of the whole "duty." Taylor's Guide. But this is a ſenſe in which it is ſeldom uſed at preſent.

ABBREUVOI'R, S. [Fr. from broiwen, Dut. or briwan, Sax. to boil] a watering place: now obſolete. But, in Maſonry, ſtill uſed for the place where two ſtones join, which is filled up with mortar or cement.

To ABBRI'DGE, V. A. [abreger, Fr. to ſhorten.] See ABRI'DGE.

To ABBRO'CH, V. A. [ abbrocher, Fr. from ab, from, and broche, a ſpit, i. e. to ſnatch off the ſpit] in Law, to buy up, or engroſs any commodities, in order to ſell them again, before they have been brought to, or expoſed in a market. M. S. temp. Ed. III.

ABRO'CHMENT, S. [abbrocamentum, Lat. See To ABBRO'CH] the act of foreſtalling.

ABUT'TALS, S. [ABBUTO, cor. Lat. abbuter, Fr. to bound, from bout, Fr. a bound, or end] in Law, the buttings or boundings of lands, ſhewing on what other lands they are bounded. The ſides are ſaid to lay bordering, but the ends are ſaid, properly, abutting, or abounding. Camd.

A'BDA, S. [עבדא Heb. a ſervant, from אבד abad, Heb. to ſerve, or that cloud, from עב, ab, Heb. a cloud, and דא da, Syr. that] a ſcripture appellative, or proper name. "Adoniram, ſon of Abda." 1 Kings iv. 6.

ABDA'LS, S. [Perſ.] a kind of furious enthuſiaſts in Aſia, who frequently run about the ſtreets, killing all they meet.

ABDELA'VI, S. in Botany, the Egyptian melon.

ABDERI'TE, S. [from Abdera, the name of a ſea-town in Thrace] an inhabitant of Abdera, applied by way of emphaſis to ſignify Democritus, who was born there.

ABDE'RIAN, Adj. [from Abdera] Abderian laughter, by medical writers, uſed to denote inceſſant laughter, in alluſion to that of Democritus of Abdera, who always laughed at the follies of mankind.

ABDE'ST, S. [Arab.] a kind of ablution, or waſhing, uſed by the Mahommedans, before prayer, at entering their moſques, or reading the Kôran.

ABDE'VENHAM, S. a term uſed in Aſtrology for the head of the twelfth houſe.

A'BDI, S. [עבדי abdi, Heb. my ſervant, from עבד abad, a ſervant, and i, my] the father of Cis, the Levite, mentioned 2 Chron. xxix. 12. Likewiſe the ſon of Maloch, 1 Chron. vi. 7.

To A'BDICATE, V. A. [abdico, Lat.] to renounce, reſign, withdraw from, or voluntarily to forſake an office, either by expreſs words, or by ſuch acts as are incompatible with the nature of it.

ABDICA'TION, S. [abdicatio, Lat.] the act whereby a perſon in office renounces the ſame, before the legal time of ſervice is expired. It differs from reſignation, becauſe that implies the quitting the office in favour of another, but this does not. Thus James the II. is ſaid to have abdicated the crown; but Philip IV. of Spain to have reſigned it, becauſe he did it in favour of his ſucceſſor.

ABDI'EL, S. [עבדיאל Heb. the ſervant of God, of עבד abad, Heb. a ſervant, and אל el, God] the proper name of a perſon mentioned 1 Chron. v. 15. "Ahi ſon of Abdiel, "chief of the houſe."

ABDITO'RIUM, S. [Lat.] in old records, a place in which goods or money were preſerved in churches, or a cheſt wherein reliques were depoſited. Mon. Ang. 173.

ABDO'MEN, S. [abdomen, Lat. from abdo, to hide, or from abdo and omentum, Lat. the caul] The cavity called the lower belly, which contains the ſtomach, guts, ſpleen, bladder, and inteſtines. It is divided into three leſs cavities or regions, termed the epigaſtrium; the umbilicos, or regio umbilicalis; and the hypogaſtrium. It is lined on the inſide with a thin, ſoft membrane, called the peritonæum, which keeps the viſcera in their places. On the outſide it is defended by five pair of muſcles, which not only preſerve the viſcera from caſualties, but likewiſe, by their alternate relaxations and contractions, promote digeſtion, and evacuate the fæces.

ABDO-

ABDO'MINAL, } Adj. [abdomen] ſeated in ABDO'MINOUS, } or belonging to the abdomen. Paunch-bellied, unweildy, according to Bailey: but now ſeldom uſed by any but medical authors.

To ABDU'CE, V. Act. [abduco, Lat. to draw from] to draw away, or move from one place or poſition to another. "If we abduce the eye unto either corner." Brown's Vulg. Err. This word ſcarcely ever occurs, unleſs in medical or ſcientific authors.

ABDU'CENT, Part. [from abduce] indued with a power of drawing, or pulling back. The abducent muſcles are thoſe which pull back the parts to which they are joined; when applied to the hand, they are thoſe muſcles which are made uſe of to open it, when ſhut.

ABDU'CTION, S. [Abductio, Lat. a drawing, deducing from] in logic, is an argument, wherein the major is evident, but the minor ſtands in need of further proof. Thus in this ſyllogiſm: "All, whom God abſolves, are freed from ſin: (which is the major) but God abſolves all who are in Chriſt, (the minor) therefore, all, who are in Chriſt, are freed from ſin (the concluſion.) The major, that, all whom God abſolves are freed from ſin, is evident; but the minor, that, God abſolves all who are in Chriſt, is not, and therefore ſtands in need of the following propoſition to prove it, namely, that God received ſatisfaction for ſin by the ſufferings of Chriſt.

In ſurgery, it ſignifies a fracture, wherein the ends of the bones recede from each other.

ABDU'CTOR, S. [Lat.] in anatomy, applied to thoſe muſcles which draw back the parts, to which they are joined. Abductor auricularis, or the abductor of the little finger, is the muſcle which is inſerted in the firſt bone, and ſerves to draw it from the reſt, and bend it a little. Abductor Indicis, or the muſcle which draws back the fore-finger, is inſerted in the firſt bone of that finger, and draws it towards the thumb. Abductor minimi digiti manus, or the drawer back of the little finger; already deſcribed, under the terms abductor auricularis. The Abductor minimi digiti pedis, or, of the little toe, is inſerted in its ſecond bone, and pulls it from the reſt. The Abductor oculi, or abductor of the eye, is one of the four muſcles, which riſes from the bottom of the orbit, and draws the eye towards the outward canthus, or corner. The Abductor pollicis, or, of the thumb, ſtiled likewiſe thenar, makes the fleſhy body, called by anatomiſts, mons Lunæ, or mountain of the moon, and draws the thumb from the fingers. The Abductor pollicis pedis, or muſcle which draws the great toe, is that which draws it from the reſt.

A-BEA'RING [part. noun.] in Law, behaviour, as, "to be bound to a good a-bearing." A word of no authority, though cited by Harris and Bailey.

ABECEDA'RIAN, S. [abecedarius, Lat.] one who teaches the alphabet, or firſt rudiments of learning. "Farnaby was reduced, by his misfortunes, to follow the trade of an Abecedarian." Wood. Ath. Oxon. Now out of uſe.

ABECE'DARY, Adj. belonging to, or inſcribed with, the letters of the alphabet, "in the center of two abecedary circles, or rings of letters." Brown's Vulg. Err. Scarce ever uſed by any authors at preſent.

ABE'CHED, Part. [abecher, F. to feed with the bill, from bec, Fr. a beak, or bill] fed, ſatisfied, refreſhed. "Yet ſhulde I ſom dele been abeched." Gower, fol. 32. p. 1. col. 2.

ABE'D, Ad. [from a contracted from at and bed.] In bed. See A.

To ABE'DGE, or ABE'G [abæc, Sax. a back, a corruption of the word abide. Skinner.] To abide, endure, or remain. Chauc. Reeves Tale beginn. Now obſolete.

ABEDNE'GO, S. [עבד־נגו Heb. Abed-nago, a ſervant of light, from עבד, abed, a ſervant, and נגה nagah, light, or ſplendor] the name given by Nebuchadnezzar to Azarias, whom he likewiſe made his miniſter, and afterwards ordered to be thrown into the fiery furnace. "He gave to Azarias the name of Abed-nego." Dan. i. 7.

A'BEL, S. [הבל Heb. Hebel, frail, mortal, unſtable.] the ſecond ſon of Adam, mentioned Gen. iv. 2. a ſhepherd of unblemiſhed integrity, and approved by the Deity, but was thro' envy ſlain by his brother Cain. A cataſtrophe which ſeems to have been prophetically known to Adam, at the time of naming him, ſince it ſtrongly points out ſuch an event.

A'BEL, S. [אבל Heb. Abel, Grief.] the name of a city twelve miles eaſt of Gadaris, mentioned 1 Sam. vi. 8. 1 Kings xv. 20. Likewiſe a town about ſeven miles from Philadelphia, where Jeptha made a league with the Ammonites.

A'BEL-BETH, MA'ACHAH, S. [אבל בית־מעכה Heb. mourning to the houſe of Maachah, from אבל, Abel, mourning, בית beth, a houſe, and מעכה Maachah] the name of a city mentioned 1 Kings xv. 20. and 2 Kings xv. 29. ſuppoſed to be the ſame with,

A'BEL-MAIM, S. [אבל־מים Heb. the mourning of waters, from אבל Heb, Abel, mourning, and מים maim, waters.] the name of a city beſieged by Benhadad, in the tribe of Naphthali; ſuppoſed by Calaſſio to have been the ſame as Abel-beth-maachah.

A'BEL-MEHO'LAH, S. [אבל־מחולה Heb. Abel-mechola, ſorrow of weakneſs, from אבל ſorrow, מ the Hebrew prefix for the ablative, and חול chol, weakneſs or ſickneſs] The name of a city in the tribe of Manaſſeh, where Eliſha was born. "Eliſha, the ſon of Shaphet, of *Abel-mechola*h. 1 Kings xix. 16.

ABELI'TION, S. the licence given to a criminal to deſiſt from proſecution. Harris.

ABEL-MIZRAI'M, S. [אבל־מצרים Heb. the mourning of the Egyptians, from אבל Abel, and מצרים meſraim, the Heb. name for Egypt.] a place ſo called from the great lamentations that were there made at the funeral of one of the patriarchs. "The name of it was called Abel-mizraim." Gen. l. 11.

A'BENAGUIES, S. the French name for the Owenagungas, North-england, or eaſtern Indians in America.

ABENAGUI'SE, S. an Indian tribe on the back parts of Nova Scotia.

A'BER or A'BBER, S. [Brit.] the fall, or emptying a leſſer water into a greater, as of a brook into a river, the mouth of a river; hence ſeveral nouns ſituated on or near the mouth of rivers generally derive the firſt part of their names, Aber-conway, &c.

A'BER-BRO'TH, S. [from aber, Brit. the mouth, broth or brothock.] a royal burgh, in the ſhire of Angus in Scotland, famous for its mineral waters. Lat. 56 deg. 36 min. Long. 2 deg. 29 min. W.

A'BER-CORN, S. [Aber, Brit. a mouth, and corn or corneth] a town in Linlithgowſhire, in Scotland, near the Edinburgh Frith, famous for a monaſtery in the time of Bede, and a caſtle, once the ſeat of Douglaſs. Lat. 56 deg. 10 m. N. Long. 3 deg. 6 min. W.

Likewiſe a ſmall village or town in Georgia, in America, ſituated on the river, and about thirteen miles from the town, of Savannah.

ABERDE'EN, or ABERDO'N, S. [from Aber, Brit. a mouth, and Dee, or Don, the names of two rivers.] The name of two places in the counties of Aberdeen or Mar; the one ſeated on the river Don, the other Dee, and ſtiled Old and New. Old Aberdeen is enobled by being a biſhop's ſee, which was tranſlated from Murtlate by K. David I. in 1100. The King's College here, ſo called from James IV. is a very neat, if not ſtately edifice. The river Don, on which this city is ſituated, is remarkable for its abundance in ſalmon and perch. A mile ſouthward from hence lies New Aberdeen, on the river Dee, as its name imports; both theſe towns, taken together, form one city, which ſurpaſſes all in the north for largeneſs and beauty. It ſtands in a fine air; its inhabitants are well bred, and the houſes well built, moſtly of ſtone, and four ſtories high. The greateſt ornament to this city is the Mareſchal-college, or academy, originally a Franciſcan friery, built by George Keith, earl-marſhal in 1693, but enlarged and beautified ſince by the city. Meſſ. Blackwell, father and ſon, were ſucceſſively its principals, writers of ſome eminence, eſpecially the latter, who wrote the Life of Homer; the Court of Auguſtus; Mythology, &c. Colin Maclaurin was profeſſor in mathematics here, till he removed to Edinburgh. The preſent profeſſor of mathematics is Mr. Stewart, well known for his commentaries on Sir Iſaac Newton's treatiſe of curves. This is the capital of the ſheriffdome, a royal burgh, and gives the title of earl to a an ancient branch of the family of Gordons. It has a great revenue from its ſalmon fiſhery, produces excellent linen, and has a good manufacture for thread and worſted ſtockings. It has a great exportation for pickled pork, which is reputed the beſt cured, for long voyages, of any in Europe; and on that account victuals moſt of the Dutch Eaſt-India ſhips. The neighbouring ſea reproaches the inhabitants with criminal negligence, for confining themſelves ſolely to the ſalmon fiſhery, while the Dutch are enriching themſelves by the great quantities of herrings, and other fiſh, they catch on their coaſts. In the middle of the city is a ſpring, called the Aberdonian ſpaw, from its being ſimilar to that in the biſhopric of Liege, both in taſte and quality.

ABERDE'EN-SHIRE, S. [from Aberdeen, and ſcyr, or ſcyre, Sax. a portion, or province, from ſcyran, Sax. to divide into portions, or parts] a county, in the middle diviſion of Scotland, bounded on the ſouth with part of Angus and Merns, or rather with the river Dee and the Grandbain mountains; on the N. W. by part of Bamff-ſhire; on the N. by part of Murray; on the E. by the German ocean; and on the W. by the river Spey, and part of Badenoch; being in length, according to Templeman, 73 miles, but 46 only, according to Gibſon's Camden; in breadth it is 28, and in area 1179 ſquare miles. The ſoil produces corn, particularly barley, rye, and oats, in great plenty. The hilly parts abound in eagles, and are covered with firs and oaks. It has quarries of variegated marble, lime-ſtone, and ſlate. Its rivers yield muſſels, containing large pearls of a tolerable good colour; the winters are more gentle than could be expected; and it has ſprings of allom-water, and veins of ſtone, from whence allom boils.

AB'ERFORD, S. [from Aber, Brit. the mouth of a river, and Ford] a ſmall market town in the weſt riding of Yorkſhire, 210 miles from London, famous for pin-making, even in Camden's time. It is near a mile long, has a market weekly on Wedneſday, and four fairs for horſes and horned cattle, viz. on the laſt Wedneſday in April, on the laſt Wedneſday in May, on the Wedneſday after St. Luke's day, and on the 18th of October. The vicarage is in the gift of Oriel college, Oxford.

ABERFRA'W, S. [Aber, Brit. a mouth, and Fraw the river's name] a ſmall village in Angleſea, N. Wales; formerly the royal ſeat of the kings of Guynedh, or N. Wales, thence ſtiled kings of Aberfraw. The rectory is in the gift of the prince of Wales.

ABERGAVE'NNY, or ABERGE'NNY, S. [the mouth or confluence of the river Gevenny, from Aber, Brit. a mouth, and Gevenny] a large well built town in Monmouthſhire, receiving its name from the Govenni, which falls below it into the Uſk. It carries on a conſiderable trade in flannels, gives the title of baron to the antient family of Nevils, the firſt baron of England; has a fine ſtone bridge conſiſting of 15 arches; is governed by a bailiff, recorder, and 27 burgeſſes; has a weekly market on Tueſday, and two fairs, the one 14 May, and the other the firſt Tueſday after Trinity-Sunday. It is diſtant from London 111 computed, and 142 meaſured miles.

‡ ABERI'STWITH, or ABER-YSTWITH, S. [the mouth of the Yſtwith, from Aber, Brit. a mouth, and Yſtwith, the name of a river] a market town in Cardiganſhire, S. Wales, built on the mouth of the Teivi, the moſt populous of the whole county; being dark and ſmoaky, and ſituated near the lead-mines, the complexion of of its inhabitants is very dark and ſwarthy. It is a corporation, conſiſting of a mayor, recorder, &c. drives a good trade in lead and fiſh, has a tolerable market for corn and wool on Mondays, and two fairs, one on the Monday before Eaſter, the other 12 Dec. Notwithſtanding its populouſneſs, it has no pariſh church! Its diſtance from London is 119 miles, according to Cote's Geograph. Dictionary, but 146 computed, or 229 meaſured miles, according to Dyche.

ABERLE'MNO, S. [from Aber, Brit. a mouth, and Lemno, the proper name of a river] a place in Angusſhire, Scotland; where is a croſs, erected upon ſome of the Danes killed there, with ſome antique pictures, and letters upon it. In the river, from whence it derives its name, are pearls, ſome of which are ſo fine and large, that they may be compared to the oriental.

ABE'RRANCE, or ABE'RRANCY, S. [Aberro, Lat. to wander from the right way] a deviation from the truth, an error, miſtake, or falſe opinion. "Alter the craſis of his underſtanding, and render it as obnoxious to aberrancies, as now." Glanville's Scep. Scient. This term is not uſed at preſent.

ABE'RRANT, Part. [Aberrans, Lat. wandering, from aberro] deviating from the right, or common way.

ABERRA'TION, S. [aberratio, Lat. a going out of the way,] the act of departing from the common track. "There is no hereſy in ſuch an aberration." Glanvil. Scepſ. Scient. This word is not uſed by preſent writers but very ſeldom. In aſtronomy, it implies a ſmall apparent motion of the fixed ſtars, diſcovered by Dr. Bradley, owing to the progreſſive motion of light, and the ſenſible proportion, which the velocity thereof bears to the velocity of the annual motion of the earth. Theſe ſmall ecliptic motions of the ſtars occaſion their declinations and diſtances from the poles of the world to vary 20 min. and a half on one ſide or the other.

ABE'SSED, Adj. [abaiſſer, F.] humbled, depreſſed, caſt down; a word of no authority, according to Skinner.

AB'JECT, S. [from abjectus, Lat.] a perſon in the extremities of poverty; in the greateſt infamy; in the loweſt abyſs of baſeneſs; and void both of conſcious integrity, or reputed honeſty.

To ABJE'CT, V. Act. [abjicio, Lat. to caſt away] to reject with diſdain, ſcorn, or content; to throw away as of no worth. A word ſeldom uſed, and void of any good authority among modern writers.

ABJE'CTEDNESS, S. [compounded of abjected and neſs, from the Goth. NS. which implies abſtraction] the ſtate or condition of an abject perſon.

ABJEC'TION, A'BJECTNESS, S. [abjectio, Lat.] a baſe, ſervile, mean diſpoſition of mind.

AB'JECTLY, Adv. [from abject] in a mean, baſe, ſervile, contemptible, or deſpicable manner.

AB'IEL, S. [אביאל, God my father from אבה Abba, father and אל el God.] The name of ſeveral perſons in ſcripture, but particularly of a hero, famous for his martial proweſs, mentioned, 1 Chron. viii. 29.

ABIE'NA, S. [abeo, Lat. to go out] ſpelt likewiſe Abeona; a goddeſs, ſuppoſed by the Romans, to protect adult perſons in their going out of doors, and render their departure from home, either proſperous or unſucceſsful.

ABIE'ZER, S. [אביעזר, Heb. the father's help, or court, from אבה abba, father, and עזר iezer, help, or a court] one of the champions of David; and likewiſe the name of a family, Joſh. xvii. 12. 2 Sam. xxiii. 27.

ABIGAIL, S. [אביגיל Heb. Father of joy, or the father's joy; from אבה Abba father and גול, Gol. He whirld round like a whirlwind; people affected with tumultous joy, generally expreſſing it in great agitations] a woman of great perſonal charms, who by her eloquence and beauty, diverted David's anger from her firſt huſband Nabal, and at the ſame time ſo captivated him, that when Nabal died, he married her, 1 Sam. xxv. 3—xxx. 5.

† ABIG'EAT, S. [from abigo, to expel by force] uſed, by medical authors, for an abortion procured by art, now obſolete.

ABIHA'IL, S. [אביחיל the father of light, or praiſe, from אבה aba father, and הלל hallel praiſe.] The name of Abiſhur's wife, mentioned 1 Chron. ii. 29.

ABI'HAIL, S. [אביחיל Heb. abichail, the father of ſtrength, or of an army, or riches from אבה abba, the father and חיל chail, ſtrength, an army, or riches] the proper name of ſeveral perſonages in ſacred writ. The ſon of Zuriel, the chief of the Mahlites, Numb. iii. 3. ii. One of the tribe of Gad, 1 Chron. v. 4. iii. the father of the celebrated Eſther, Eſth. ii. 15. of Abiſur's wife, 1 Chron. ii. 8. and iv. the daughter of Eliab, married to K. Rehoboam, 2 Chron. xi. 18.

A[illegible]'HU, S. [אביהוא he is my father, from אב ab, father, יי i, my, and הוא hu, he is.] the ſon of Aaron, the ſon of Amram, the ſon Caath, the ſon of Levi, Exod. vi. 23. and 1 Chron. vi. 23. Who was deſtroyed by lightning, for uſing ſtrange, or unhallowed fire in ſacrifice, Lev. x. 1.

*†‡ ABI'JAH and ABI'AM, S. [אביה and אבים, the former implying the Lord my father, from אב ab, father, and יה jah God; and the latter, father of the ſea from אב ab a father, and ים iam, the ſea.] Two appellatives which are promiſcuouſly uſed for the ſon of King Rehoboam, 1 Kings xiv. 1. and 31. xv. 1. 7. 1 Chron. xxiv. 10. Likewiſe the name of Hezekiah's mother, 1 Chron. xxix. 1.

*†‡ ABI'LENE S. [the father of the apartment or mourning] a province ſituated between Libanus and Antilabanus, mentioned Luke iii. 1.

ABI'LITY, S. [ of HABILITE', Fr. of abal Sax. power] In the ſingular, power ſufficient for the performance of any thing, whether it require, wealth, underſtanding, or ſtrength. In the plural, abilities, peculiarly the powers or faculties of the mind. "We find our abilities too weak for the performance." Roger's Serm.

 ABI'MELECH, S. [אבימלך Heb. my father, the king or the greateſt King, from אבי my father, and מלך Melech, a king ſuperior to others in dignity] a king of Gerar in Philiſtia, about the year of the world 1086, famous for his detention of Abraham's wife. And though ſome commentators imagine his name, like that of Pharaoh and Ptolemy, to be rather a name of office, and ſay, that the perſon who detained Rachael, the wife of Iſaac, was another perſon, who bore the ſame title; yet the circumſtances of the ſtory; the poſſibility of his living to that time, and ſeveral other reaſons, ſeem to make it more than probable, that it was the ſame perſon, who was guilty of both theſe exertions of deſpotic authority. See Gen. xx. xxi. xxvi. and xxiv.

 ABI'NADAB, S. [אבינדב the father of a Prince, from אבה a father, and נדב nadab, a Prince] the name of ſeveral perſonages in Scripture. 1. The grandfather of David, 1 Kings xvi. 8. 2. The ſon of Saul, who was ſlain by the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. xxxi. 2. 1 Chron. viii. 32. iii. The perſon to whom the ark was brought, after its capture by the Philiſtines; from whom David fetched it, as mentioned, 2 Sam. vi.

 ABI'NOAM, S. [אבינעם Heb. the father of beauty or pleaſure, from אב a father, and נעם noem, beauty.] The father of Barak, one of the judges of the people of Iſrael, of the tribe of Nepthali, Jud. iv. 6.

‡ ABI'NTESTATE, Adj. [of ab and inteſtatus, Lat. one who leaves no will behind him] in civil law, one who inherits the eſtate of another, who died without will.

* ABI'NGTON, ABI'NGDON, or ABE'NDON, S. [from abban, Sax. an abbey, and dune, Sax. a mountain or open plain] a ſmall town on the Ouſe in Berkſhire, formerly called, by the Anglo-Saxons Sheovesham, Ciſſa, king of the Weſt-Saxons, built an abbey here in 675, on which account it changed its name to ABBANDUN, which it derived from the abbey, and its ſituation, which, according to the book of Abendon, is upon the plain of an hill. It is a free borough and town incorporate, conſiſting of a mayor, two bailiffs, nine aldermen, and has a power of electing nineteen more. It has likewiſe a high-ſteward, recorder, and town-clerk; ſends one member to parliament, has a charity-ſchool, two alms-houſes, and a free-ſchool founded by Mr. Royſe, in 1563. Its weekly markets are on Monday and Friday; its fairs, the firſt Monday in lent, the 20th of June, the 19th of September, and the 11th of December. Its market-houſe is handſome, built on lofty pillars, with a large hall above, wherein are held the county aſſizes. The trade of the inhabitants conſiſts chiefly in malt, which is carried in barges to London, from which it is diſtant 150 miles by water, and 55 by land.—Likewiſe a neat town of Philadelphia county in Pennſylvania, North America.

 ABI'RAM, S. [אבירם Heb. the father of highneſs or election, from אב a father, and רום rom, highneſs] one of the confederates of Corah, who was involved in the ſame dreadful cataſtrophe, Numb. xvi. 1. Deut. xi. 6. Likewiſe the ſon of Hilel, rebuilder of Jericho, 1 Kings xvi. 34.

ABI'SHAG, S. [אבישג the multiplying father, from אבה abbah, father, and שגה ſhagah, multiplying] a young virgin, of remarkable beauty, choſen to cheriſh and adminiſter to David, in his advanced age, 1 Kings i. to 4 v.

‡ ABISHA'I, S. [אבישי Heb. my father's reward from אבה father, י i, my and שי ſhai, a reward] the brother of Joab, and one of David's champions, who in company with two others, attacked a body of three hundred men, and ſlew them, 2 Sam. xxii. 18, 19. 1 Chron. xi. 20, 21.

 ABI'SHERING or ABISHE'RSING, S. [* Beſhaetzen, Teut. to fine] in antient records, a liberty, or freedom from amerciaments; and alſo to have thoſe of others within ones fee.

ABIT' or ABIT'TE, V. N. [2d perſon preſent] abideth, or dwelleth, Bailey from Chauc. a word of no authority, and obſolete.

ABI'TION, S. [abitio Lat.] a going away, dying: a word of no uſe.

 ABI'UD, S. [אבידוד Heb. the father of praiſe or confeſſion, from אב ab, father, and ידה Jedah, praiſe or confeſſion] the ſon of Bela, the ſon of Benjamin, the ſon of Jacob, 1 Chron. viii. 3.

ABJURA'TION, S. [abjuratio, Lat.] in a general ſenſe, the act of renouncing or denying with an oath; among the Romans, the denying of a debt or depoſite by a falſe oath. In a more reſtrained and modern ſenſe, a ſolemn recantation, or renunciation of ſome perſon, doctrine, or thing.

Oath of ABJURATION, is that which is taken by all perſons matriculated in univerſities, by thoſe admitted to ſcholarſhips, fellowſhips, headſhips, holy orders, or poſts in the government: it conſiſts in renouncing upon oath every title or claim of the pretender and his heirs to this crown. In law it ſignifies a ſworn baniſhment for life; for if a man committed felony, and fled to ſome church-yard, on confeſſion of his crime to the coroner, he was admitted to his oath of abjuring the kingdom, and freed from further proſecution. But by the ſtatute 21 Jac. i. all uſe of ſanctuaries being taken away, this kind of abjuration ceaſed.

To ABJU'RE, V. Act. [abjurer, F. of abjurare, Lat.] in a ſecondary ſenſe, to quit or abandon, in alluſion to the neceſſity of their quitting the realm, who had taken this oath: to caſt off, and have no connection with; "abjure for ever the ſociety of men." Shakeſ. To retract, renounce, or recant an opinion upon oath.

ABLA'DIUM, S. [obſolete] corn mowed and reaped.

To ABLAC'TATE, V. Act. [ablactio Lat. of ab, negative, and lac, Lat. milk] To wean from the breaſt: in a ſecondary ſenſe, to leave off a thing which is become habitual; a word ſeldom uſed.

ABLACTA'TION, S. [Ablactatio, Lat.] the act of weaning a child: metaphorically, the quitting an inveterate habit. Seldom uſed by modern writers. In gardening, a method of grafting, wherein the cyon of one tree is united to another by degrees, and then cut off or weaned from its mother ſtock. In modern gardening it is called inarching, or grafting by approach, and is practicable only when two trees are ſo near, that the cyon of one may be applied, without cutting off, to the ſtock of another. On this account it is ſeldom practiſed on any other but thoſe plants which grow in caſes, ſuch as oranges, lemons, and pomegranate trees, jaſmins, vines, &c.

 ABLA'QUE, S. [Ablaque, or la ſoy ablaque, Fr.] the Ardaſſine ſilk, which comes from Perſia, by way of Smyrna: though very fine and little inferior to the Sourbaſtis, it is ſeldom uſed in the ſilk manufactures at Lyons and Tours, becauſe it will not bear hot water in the winding.

ABLAQUEA'TION, S. [ Ablaqueatio, Lat. of ab, from and laqueus, a ditch] in gardening, the digging away the mould from the roots of trees, that the ſun, air and rain may operate upon them, and recover their loſt, or improve their preſent fecundity.

ABLA'TION, S. [ablatio, Lat.] the act of taking away, diminiſhing or making leſs. Seldom uſed and of no authority.

AB'LATIVE, Adj. [ablativus, Lat. taking away] in latin grammar the ſixth caſe: it is peculiar to that language and therefore ſtiled by ſome the Latin caſe. This is oppoſed to the dative, becauſe that implies the act of giving, but the ablative that of taking. In engliſh we uſe the term only in alluſion to its force in the Latin, our nouns having properly ſpeaking no ſuch caſe. Thus in this ſentence "Of man's firſt diſobe-"dience and the fruit—Of that forbidden tree." Par. Loſt. Of man's firſt diſobedience is termed the ablative, and Of that forbidden tree the genitive, becauſe they would be rendered by thoſe caſes in Latin.

A'BLE, Adj. [‡ abal, Sax. ſtrength, power or fortitude] endued with, or having power ſufficient; metaphorically, great powers ariſing from knowledge or wealth; "he was ſerved by the ableſt men." Bacon's Hen. viii. when joined with for, it implies qualified; "able for utterance," Wilkins. Mathem. Magic.

‡† To A'BLE, V. Act. [from able] to endue with ſufficient power; uſed inſtead of ENABLE; which ſee.

‡† ABLE-BO'DIED, Adj. [compounded of able and body] ſtrong in body, "many Able-bodied clergymen." Swift's againſt aboliſh. Chriſtian.

†‡ ABLE'CTI, S. of ab Lat. from, and lectus, Lat. choſen] in Roman antiquities, a ſelect body of ſoldiers choſen out of the Extraordinarii.

‡ To AB'LEGATE, V. Act. [ablego, Lat.] to ſend abroad upon an embaſſy, or other public employ: figuratively, to ſend a perſon, one is tired of, out of the way. This word is not ſupported by the uſe of any good modern writer.

ABLEGA'TION, S. [from ablegate] the act of ſending, or the ſtate of a perſon ſent abroad, or out of the way. A word which wants authority †‡ ABLEG'MINA, S. [of ab, from and lego, Lat. to chuſe] in Roman antiquities, choice parts of the entrails of victims.

AB'LENESS [‡ from able] ſufficient power, or capacity to do a thing; ability of mind or body: "both for comelineſs and ableneſs," Sidney. Inſtead of this word modern writers uſe ability.

† AB'LEPSY, S. [αβλεψια, Gr. ableptia, not ſeeing] want of ſight; figuratively, inadvertence, unadviſedneſs, or raſhneſs. Seldom to be met with in authors of note.

To AB'LIGATE, V. Act. [abligo, Latin, of ab, from, and ligo, to tie or bind] to bind or tie up from. A word of no uſe.

ABLIGURI'TION, S. [abliguritio, Lat.] a waſteful, extravagant, or prodigal ſpending a man's eſtate. Though it has a place in Bailey and Dyche, it is not adopted by any modern writer of taſte.

‡† To AB'LOCATE, V. Act. [abloco Lat.] to let out to hire; ſpoken properly of one, who is hired himſelf. Calvin's Lex Jur. Seldom uſed ABLOCA'TION, S. [from ablocate] the act of letting out to hire. A word of no uſe; and ſeems to have crept into our language either through the ignorance of tranſlators, or the pedantry of dictionary-makers.

To ABLU'DE, V. Act. [ablude, Lat.] to be unlike. A word of no authority.

AB'LUENT, Adj. [abluo, Lat. to waſh or away] that which waſhes clean, or cleanſes †‡ Abluent medicines are ſuch as dilute, diſſolve and carry off the acrimonious ſalts lodged in the parts of the bodies, ſtiled more properly detergents which ſee.

ABLU'TION, S. [ablutio, Lat.] The act of cleanſing, or waſhing clean, in its primary ſenſe. In its ſecondary, what is left after the act of waſhing. Ablution, was a religious ceremony practiſed practiſed by the ancient Romans before they began to ſacrifice, which they, probably, borrowed from the Jews; for whom Solomon made a great laver, or braſs ſea, wherein the prieſts uſed to waſh themſelves before they offered ſacrifice, having firſt ſanctified the water by throwing in the aſhes of a victim, that had been ſlain for the ſacrifice. The Mohammedans retain this ceremony with religious ſcrupulouſneſs. In the Roman church the word is uſed for a ſup of wine and water not conſecrated, given by the prieſt to waſh down, and promote the digeſtion of the hoſt. And is likewiſe made uſe of to ſignify what the prieſt waſhes his hands with. In pharmacy, ablution, denotes the preparations, which divers medicines undergo to cleanſe them from their impurities. In phyſic, the waſhing the external parts of the body by baths, or the internal, by thin diluting fluids. In chemiſtry, the waſhing or infuſing certain medicines in water, to freſhen them and diſſolve their ſalts. See DULCIFYING.

ABLY'ING, Part. [abal*, Sax. power] communicating ſufficient power for the performance of any particular action. Bailey from Chaucer: A word now obſolete.

‡ To AB'NEGATE, V. Act. [abnego, Lat.] to deny. A word of no uſe at preſent.

ABNEGA'TION, S. [Abnegatio, Lat.] a poſitive and abſolute negation, or denial of a thing; with divines, the renouncing our paſſions, intereſts, and luſts; being ſynonimous to ſelf-denial.

ABN'ER, S. [*אבנר Heb. Abiner, the father's candle, from אב ab, a father, and ניר ner, a candle.] the ſon of Ner, and general of Saul's forces, to whom he introduced David, after his ſlaying Goliah the giant. His fidelity to Saul's houſe is repreſented in ſtrong terms by the ſacred pages: but meeting at length with abuſe inſtead of gratitude from Iſhboſheth, he quitted his party; and as he was returning from making ſome overtures to David, was treacherouſly killed by Joab, David's general, in revenge for the death of Aſahel his brother, 1 Sam. xvii. 57. xxvi. 15. 2 Sam. ii. and iii.

‡ To AB'NODATE, V. Act. [of ab negative and nodus, a knot] to cut off the knots of trees.

ABNODA'TION, S. [abnodatio, Lat.] in gardening, the pruning away knots, knobs, or other excreſcencies from trees.

ABNO'RMETH, V. Act. [iii. perſ. ſing. of abnorm from abnormis, Lat. out of rule] diſfigureth or diſguiſeth. Bailey from Chauc. obſolete.

ABNOR'MITY, S. [abnormitas, Lat.] uglineſs, deformity. A word of no uſe, or authority, perhaps coined by Bailey.

ABNO'RMOUS, Adj. [abnormis, Lat.] irregular, in ſhape deformed. Seldom occurs in good authors.

ABO'ARD, Adv. [‡ from a implying on, or a and bord, Sax. a houſe. A ſhip being by the ſeamons termed a water-houſe,] a ſea-term, in a ſhip, "called to them that were aboard." Fairy Q. In gaming, it is uſed to imply that the ſide which at firſt was leſs, is equal to the other.

ABO'DE, V. Neut. [the preter. of abide] remained, continued ſome ſpace of time, ſtayed; "abode with them that day." John i. 39.

ABO'DE, S. [from abide] the act of ſtaying any time, or continuing in any place, when joined to the word make; figuratively, the place wherein a perſon ſtays, continues, or dwells. "I know thy abode." 2 Kings xix. 27.

To ABO'DE, V. Act. [bodian, Sax. to foretell] to preſage, ſhew, or threaten a thing before it happens; to foretell. It is uſed both in a good or bad ſenſe. "This tempeſt aboded a ſudden breach." Shakeſp. Hen. VIII.

ABO'DEMENT, S. [from abode] a ſecret impreſſion of the mind, anticipation, or preſage of ſomething future. "Abodements muſt not fright us." Hen. VIII.

ABO'GEN, Part. [abogen, Sax. from abeogan, Sax. to bend] bowed; an obſolete word.

To ABO'LISH, V. Act. [abolir, Fr. from aboleo, Lat. to blot out] to deſtroy, to put an end to; figuratively, to annul, to annihilate. "Wilt thou thyſelf aboliſh thy creation?" Par. Loſt.

‡ ABO'LISHABLE, Adj. [* from aboliſh and abal, Sax. power] that which may, or can be aboliſhed.

ABO'LISHER, S. [from aboliſh] the thing, or perſon which aboliſhes.

‡ ABO'LISHING, Part. [from aboliſh] that which annuls, repeals, or deſtroys. "The aboliſhing clauſe of an act."

ABO'LISHMENT, S. [from aboliſh] the act or cauſe of aboliſhing. This term is now changed for the word

ABOLI'TION, S. [abolitio, Lat. now uſed inſtead of aboliſhment] the act of deſtroying. In common law, the repealing any law or ſtatute; in civil law, the leave given to deſiſt from further proſecution; in metaphyſics, an abſolute deſtruction.

‡ ABOMA'SUS, ABOMA'SUM, S. [Lat.] the maw, or laſt of the four ſtomachs, in ruminating animals, wherein the chyle is formed; and in calves, where the rennet is found, which is made uſe of to curdle milk.

ABO'MINABLE, Adj. [from abominabilis, Lat.] that excites horror, joined with averſion and deteſtation. In converſation, this term is uſed to convey an idea of ſomething ſuperlative. "Abominable, unclean," is ſomething ſuperlatively ſo.

ABO'MINABLENESS, S. [from abominabilis, Lat.] the quality which renders any thing odious.

ABO'MINABLY, Adj. [from abominable] extremely, prodigiouſly, ſuperlatively, in an ill ſenſe; a word of low and familiar language. "cheat you moſt abominably." Hiſt. of Jn. Bull.

ABO'MINANTS, S. [abominans, Lat.] thoſe who abhor or dread any bad omen or preſage; ſtands purely on the authority of Bailey, who as a dictionary-maker might be permitted to make words, but cannot claim any authority to eſtabliſh them.

To ABO'MINATE, V. Act. [abominor, Lat.] to abhor, deteſt, or have any extreme averſion to. "Abominate, and deſpiſe all myſtery." Gulliv.

ABO'MINATION, S. [from abominatio, Lat. or abominate] an object cauſing extream averſion.

averſion. When uſed with the auxiliary verb, to have, followed by the particle in; to reckon, or look upon, as an object of deteſtation. As idolatry and idols are objects of the divine averſion, they are therefore figuratively expreſſed by this word in ſcripture: "Aſhtoreth, the abomination of the, &c." 2 Kings xxiii. 13.

A'BON, or A'VON, S. [Afon*, Brit.] among the antient Britons, a river, as the Avon in Warwickſhire, from whence the adjacent town is called Stratford upon Avon, i. e. Stratford upon the river, ABORI'GINES, S. [of ab negative, and origo, Lat, a ſource, or beginning] the antient inhabitants of a country, whoſe origin is unknown.

ABO'RSEMENT, S. [aborſus, Lat.] an untimely birth. We are indebted to Bailey's drag-net for this word, which is of no authority.

To ABO'RT, V. Act. [of aborto, Lat.] to bring forth before the due time. Seldom uſed.

ABO'RTION, S. [abortio, Lat.] a miſcarriage, or the excluſion of a child from the womb before the due time of delivery: in irrational animals, it is termed ſlinking or caſting their young. Abortion is produced by cauſes immediately affecting the child or the mother; with reſpect to the child, whatever occaſions its death cauſes abortion; with reſpect to the mother, immoderate evacuations, ſudden paſſions, frights, diſtempers either acute or chronical, lifting too great a weight, ſtraining in order to ſpeak loud, a diſagreeable ſmell, the heavineſs and largeneſs of the fœtus, irritation of the womb, relaxation of the placenta, weakneſs and want of nouriſhment in the fœtus, exceſs of eating, faſting, or watching, the uſe of buſks, and every thing which tends to promote the menſes. Abortion is dangerous, when the time of pregnancy is far advanced; where the cauſe is violent, the patient convulſed, large hæmorrhages precede, or the fœtus is putrefied. By the figure metonymia, wherein the cauſe is made uſe of for the effect, this term is uſed for the fœtus thus expelled: "The abortion proved only a female fœtus." In gardening, the word ſignifies ſuch fruits as are produced too early.

ABO'RTIVE, Adj. [abortivus, Lat.] that which is brought forth before its time; figuratively, any thing or deſign which miſcarries, is fruſtrated, or comes to nothing.

‡ ABO'RTIVE, Adj. [from ab, a negative, and ortus, a riſing] that which one cannot riſe from. "Plunged in that abortive gulph." Par. Loſt, C. ii. 451. This is an unuſual acceptation, and, as far as we know, to be met with only in the author juſt produced.

‡↓ ABO'RTIVE-VE'LLUM, S. [compound word] vellum, made of the ſkin of an abortive calf.

ABO'RTIVELY, Adv. of quality, or the manner. [‡ from abortive and ly; thoſe adjectives which end in this ſyllable, which anſwers to the Sax. lic, or lice, denote the ſame quality or manner, as the adjectives from whence they are derived] born before the due time.

ABO'RTIVENESS, S. [from abortive] the ſtate of abortion; figuratively, want of ſucceſs, diſappointment.

↓↓ ABOO'T, Part. [ a corruption of a-bowed] caſt down, dejected, daunted. "She was abaſhed, and aboot." Chaut. fol. 340. p. 1. C. i. now obſolete.

ABO'VE, Prep. [Bufan, Sax.] higher in place, or poſition; before nouns of time, it denotes more, or longer than; figuratively, it ſignifies ſuperiority, or higher in rank, power, or excellence; likewiſe beyond, or more than. "We are preſſed out of meaſure, above ſtrength." 2 Cor. i. 8. When joined with the word reaſon, it denotes a diſproportion between the object and our intellectual faculties, and its not being diſcoverable by the exerciſe of them. When uſed comparatively, it implies, preferable to.

↓‡ ABO'VE, Adv. [this is diſtinguiſhed from the prep. by the manner in which it is uſed, becauſe that is followed by nouns, but this is not; and has a relation not to the words which precede, but thoſe which follow it] a higher place; and, figuratively, the heavens. In alluſion to the method of writing antiently on ſcrolls, it denotes before.

‡↓ ABO'VE-GROUND [compound word, alluding to a perſon's being put under ground, at his burial] alive; to be met with, or found. "I'll find him if he be above-ground." A low and familiar expreſſion.

ABO'VE-MENTIONED, Part. [a compound word; ſee above] mentioned, or ſpoken of in a former part of a work or writing.

ABOU'GHT, ABOU'GHTIN, Part. [obſolete] bought, paid dear for, ſuffered. Bailey, from Chauc.

To ABOU'ND, V. Neut. [abundo, Lat. abonder, Fr.] when uſed with the particles in, or with, to have an exceſſive great number, or quantity of any thing; when uſed without the particles, to increaſe prodigiouſly, to be in great number, plenty, or exceſs.

ABOU'T, Prep. [abutan, Sax. encircling] when applied to time or place, it denotes near, or within compaſs of; and when uſed before words implying meaſure, "about night," "about Cheapſide." Its moſt ſimple acceptation is that of round, ſurrounding, or encircling, according to the Saxon, from whence it is derived. "about the keel." Waller. Figuratively, annexed, or appendant to a perſon, as cloaths, &c. concerning, of, relating to.

ABOU'T, Adv. [in circumference, or compaſs. "two yards about." Merry W. of Windſ.

Figura

Figuratively, the longeſt way, in oppoſition to the ſhorteſt, alluding to the difference between the circumference and diameter of a circle; when joined with go, it ſignifies from place to place, or every where: "he went about doing good." Acts. When prefixed to other verbs, it implies that the action or thing affirmed will ſoon happen; as, "about to fight." When following the verb to be, it denotes being engaged, or employed in; "what are you about?"

‡‡ABOU'T, Adj. [‡ à bout, to an end, Fr.] a certain point, period, or ſtate: "he has brought about his purpoſes," i. e. he has accompliſhed them. When joined with come, it implies the thing arrived at a certain ſtate or point: "when the time was come about." 1 Sam. i. 20. When joined with go, it implies preparation, or deſign: "why go ye about to kill me?" John viii. 19. In familiar diſcourſe, we ſay, "to come about a man," i. e. to circumvent him.

‡ ABRU'PTED, Part. [abruptus, Lat. a word ſeldom uſed] broken off ſuddenly: "not precipitouſly abrupted." Modern writers have entirely declined uſing this term.

ABRU'PTION, S. [abruptio, Lat.] breaking off, ſeparation: "marks of its abruption." Woodward's Nat. Hiſt. This term is not to be found in the authors who are famous for their ſtyle at preſent.

ABRU'PTLY, Adv. [from abrupt] in a haſty, unexpected, rude manner; without the previous ceremonies required.

ABRU'PTNESS, S. [from abrupt] an haſty, unexpected, un-ceremonious manner; ſuddenneſs, the ſtate of uncon-nectedneſs, rugged-neſs, craggineſs: "which abruptneſs is cauſed by its being broken off." Woodw.

 A'BRUS, S. in exotic botany, a kind of red phaſeolus, or kidney-bean, growing in Egypt and the Indies.

A'BSALOM, S. [‡ אבשלום Heb. the father of peace, or the father's peace; the father of conſummation, or the father's conſummation; the father of retribution, or the father's retribution; from אבה abah, father, and שלם ſhallum, pacific, perfect, or awarding] the ſon of David by Maacha, who, together with his ſiſter, were remarkable for their perſonal charms. After his return from exile, for the murther of Ammon his brother, he conſpired againſt his father, and drove him out of his kingdom; but was afterwards ſlain by Joab, as he hung by his hair on a tree. 2 Sam. Chap. xiii. to xviii.

A'BSCESS, S. [abſceſſus, Lat.] a critical diſcharge of humours, which collects itſelf ſo as to form a tumour, or ſwelling, and break or corrode the veſſels, if not diſcuſſed: the matter thus collected is ſometimes included in a cyſtis or bag, and appears curdy and is then termed an encyſted tumour. Hippocrates and Galen uſe this word, abſceſs, for the change of one ſpecies of fever into another; as an intermittent into a continual; and ſometimes they ſubſtitute it for any critical evacuation: modern authors do not follow them in this abuſe of the word, but confine themſelves to its firſt acceptation.

ABSCE'SSION, S. [abſceſſio, Lat.] going-away, departure. A word of no authority.

To ABSCI'ND, V. Act. [abſcindo, Lat.] to cut off. Not often uſed.

ABSCI'SSA, or ABSCI'SSE, S. [abſciſſus, Lat.] in conics, that part of the axis in a curve lined figure, that is cut off by an ordinate, and contained between the vertex and the ordinate: hence there may be an infinite number of abſciſſa in the ſame curves, as well as ordinates.

ABSCI'SSION, S. [abſciſſio, Lat.] the act of cutting off; the ſtate of being cut off. "this interciſſion, not abſciſſion, or total deſtruction." Brown's Vulg. Err. Scarce ever uſed by modern writers.

To ABSCO'ND, V. N. [abſcondo, Lat. to hide] to keep one's ſelf from the view or knowledge of the public; to hide: applied to thoſe who fly from the commerce of mankind to eſcape the law, whether on account of debt, or criminal actions.

ABSCON'DER, S. [ from abſcond, and wair, Goth. war, Sax. a man] the perſon who quits his dwelling on account of debts and crimes, to prevent his being diſcovered.

ABSCO'NDING, Part. Preſ. [from abſcond] the act of avoiding the ſight of mankind, or leaving one's reſidence with that view: in law, it is generally allowed a circumſtantial proof of the guilt of a criminal.

ABSCO'NSION, S. [See ABSCO'ND] an hiding: A word of no authority.

A'BSENCE, S. [abſence, Fr. abſentia, Lat.] diſtance, which renders a perſon incapable of ſeeing and converſing with another; uſed in oppoſition to preſence; figuratively, inattention to the preſent object; becauſe a perſon in that ſtate reſembles one who is diſtant. It is uſed with the particle from, which limits its ſignification. "His abſence from his mother." Dryd. In law, it is diſtinguiſhed, 1. into neceſſary and involuntary, which is that of baniſhed perſons; 2. neceſſary and voluntary, or that which is in the ſervice of the church or ſtate; 3. probable, which is that of a ſtudent, on account of ſtudy; 4. entirely voluntary, which is that of a perſon on account of trade, and the like; and, 5. an abſence cum dolo et culpa (with deceit and blame) being that which is committed by a perſon on his not appearing on a citation, through contumacy.

A'BSENT, Part. [abſens, Lat.] at a diſtance from, out of the ſight and hearing of a perſon; figuratively, inattentive to, or regardleſs of, ſomething preſent; uſed ſometimes with the particle from: "abſent from London."

To ABSE'NT, V. Act. [from abſent] to withdraw, or decline the preſence of a perſon, or thing.

‡ AB-

‡‖ ABSENTA'NEOUS, Adj. [abſentaneus, Lat.] done in, or relating to abſence; ſeldom, if ever, uſed by modern authors.

‡ ABSENTEE', S. [See A'BSENT] in law, he that is abſent from his ſtation, or country; moſt generally applied to the Iriſh refugees: "a great part of eſtates in Ireland is owned by abſentees." Child on trade.

ABSE'NTER, S. [from abſent and wair, Goth. or wær, Sax. a man] one who does not attend: "an abſenter from church." "an abſenter from parliament."

ABSI'NTHIATED, Part. [from abſinthium, Lat. wormwood] in medicine, impregnated with wormwood.

‡* ABSI'NTHIUM, S. [wormwood, ἀψινθιον, Gr. apſinthion, unpleaſant, from a negative, implying void, and ψινθος, pſinthos, according to Heſychius, delight] there are 33 ſpecies of this plant; but that uſed in phyſic is the abſinthium vulgare majus of Bauhine, or common wormwood: the leaves and flowers have a very bitter taſte, and a very ſtrong ſmell. The virtues of this herb, according to Boerhaave, are immortal; as curing all dropſies not attended with a rupture of the viſcera: a conſerve made of the tender tops of the leaves is of great ſervice to perſons labouring under a langour; and an infuſion of them in wine is very good for the worms: it grows on roads and dunghills, and is very common in England: flowers in July, may be propagated from ſlips, in March or October, and is by Linnæus ſtiled "Artemeſia foliis compoſitis multifidis, floribus ſub-globoſis pendulis, receptaculo globoſo." i, e. Mugwort, with multifidious compound leaves, hanging half globular flowers, and a hairy receptacle.

AB'SIS. See APSI'S.

To ABSI'ST, V. N. [abſiſto, Lat.] to ſtand off, or leave off: a word which ſeldom, if ever, occurs in modern writers.

ABSOLU', Part. [abſolu, F.] abſolved: this word ſeems to be adopted only to increaſe his number, by Bailey; not occurring in any claſſic Engliſh writer.

ABSOLVA'TORY, Adj. [abſolutoire, Fr. from abſolutorius, Lat.] that has relation to pardon, or abſolution.

To ABSO'LVE, V. Act. [abſolvo, Lat.] to clear, or acquit of a crime; to free from an engagement, or promiſe; to pardon, in alluſion to the abſolution of a prieſt; to perfect, accompliſh, or compleat, applied to time: "abſolved in the ſpace of twenty-four hours." Hale's Orig. This is a ſenſe in which it is ſeldom uſed at preſent.

A'BSOLUTE, Adj. [abſolutus, Lat.] perfect, without defect, compleat, without conditions: "though it runs in forms abſolute." South. Independent, without relation: "abſolute ſpace." Without reſtraint, or limitation: "my crown is abſolute." Dryd. Poſitive: "I'm abſolute it was." Shak. ſp. This latter ſenſe ſeems now quite obſolete.

A'BSOLUTE NUMBER, in algebraic equations, the known quantity, which poſſeſſeth one ſide of an equation, being the rectangle, or ſolid, whoſe root or value is to be found: thus in this equation, $aa + 16 = 36$, the abſolute number is 36, which is equal to aa multiplied by itſelf added to 16 times a. Abſolute equation, in aſtronomy, is the aggregate, or amount of the eccentric and optic equations. Abſolute eſtate, in law, is one free from incumbrances. Abſolute abſolute, in grammar, is a word or phraſe which has no dependence on any other in the period, of which it makes a part. This occurs very often in Latin authors, and is mimicked in Engliſh, when we ſay, "all things conſidered, reaſon is the beſt guide." The words in italics, if rendered into Latin, would be the ablative abſolute, and are therefore termed ſo by ſome Engliſh grammarians.

AB'SOLUTELY, Adv, [ from abſolute, and the termination ly, from the Sax. lic, which implies manner] in an entire, compleat, perfect manner; without any check, reſtraint, or limits: poſitively, "command me abſolutely not to go." Par. Loſt.

AB'SOLUTENESS, S. [from abſolute and neſs, Goth.] compleatneſs; freedom from reſtrictions: when applied to the exerciſe of regal power, arbitrarineſs, deſpoticiſm.

ABSOLU'TION, S. [abſolutio, Lat.] in common law, a full acquittal of a perſon, by ſome final ſentence; a temporal diſcharge from farther attendance upon a meſne proceſs: in eccleſiaſtic law, a juridical act, whereby a prieſt pronounces pardon for ſins to ſuch as, upon confeſſion, ſeem to have the neceſſary qualifications. Abſolutions from Rome are high treaſon, by Stat. 23 Eliz.

AB'SOLUTORY, Adj. [abſolutorius, Lat.] that which imports pardon, forgiveneſs, or abſolution.

AB'SONANT, Part. [abſonans, Lat.] ſounding harſhly; figuratively, contrary to reaſon, abſurd, foreign to the purpoſe.

AB'SONOUS, Adj. [ abſonans, Lat. ill-ſounding] not agreeable to, in alluſion to the concords of muſic: "abſonous to reaſon." Glanville. This word is, at preſent, very ſeldom uſed.

ABSONIA'RE, V. Act. [uſed in old records] to ſhun, avoid, deteſt. Now obſolete.

To ABSO'RB, V. Act. [preter, abſorbed, part. preter, abſorbed, or abſorpt, from abſorbeo, Lat. to ſup up] to ſuck up.

ABSO'RBENT, S. [abſorbens, Lat.] in phyſic, medicines which dry up redundant humours, whether applied internally or externally; likewiſe the lacteals, which abſorb the chyle; the cutaneous veſſels, which admit the water in baths or fomentations; or thoſe veſſels which open into the cavities of the body, and imbibing the extravaſated juices, convey them to the circulating blood.

ABSO'RPT, Part. pret. [See ABSO'RB.] ſwallowed up, whether uſed in its primitive ſenſe of things, or in its ſecondary ſenſe of perſons.

ABSO'RPTION, S. [from abſorb] the act of ſwallowing, or ſucking up: "the cauſes of this diſruption, or this abſorption." Burnet. At preſent very little uſed, and uneſtabliſhed by proper authority.

⁂ A'BSQUE HOC, [Lat. without this] in law, words of exception uſed in a traverſe: "the defendant pleads, ſuch a thing was done "at B. abſque hoc, i. e. unleſs it was done at C. Mod. Caſes, 103.

To ABSTAI'N, V. Neut. [abſtineo, Lat.] to forbear, to refrain from, or decline any gratification: it is uſed with the particle from: "abſtain from all appearance of evil." 1 Theſſ. v. 22. and with great elegance applied to inanimate things: "the doubtful billows ſcarce abſtain from the toſs'd veſſel." Dryd. Virgil.

ABSTE'MIOUS, Adj. [abſtemius, Lat.] temperate in the enjoyment of ſenſual gratifications: figuratively, the cauſe of temperance: "Such is the virtue of the abſtemious well." Dryd. Fab. Sometimes uſed ſubſtantively, for thoſe who practiſe the virtue of temperance: "chiefly among the abſtemious." Arbuthn. on aliment.

ABSTE'MIOUSLY, Adv. [⁂ from abſtemious and ly, from the Sax. lic, or lice, which denotes manner] in a ſober, temperate manner.

ABSTE'MIOUSNESS, S. [from abſtemious, and NS. Goth.] the quality of being temperate, or declining the gratifying of our ſenſual appetites.

ABSTE'NSION or ABSTE'NTION, S. [abſtineo, Lat.] the act of holding off, or reſtraining: in common law, the withholding or hindering an heir from taking poſſeſſion of his right.

To ABSTE'RGE, V. Act. [abſtergo, Lat. to wipe off] to wipe clean, to cleanſe: uſed moſtly by medical writers.

ABSTE'RGENT, Part. preſ. [abſtergens, Lat.] endued with a cleanſing quality: uſed ſubſtantively in medicine, it ſignifies medicines which abrade and wipe away ſuch mucous particles as they meet with: their moſt uſual name is that of detergents.

To ABSTE'RSE, V. Act. [abſtergo, Lat.] to cleanſe or purify: a word ſeldom uſed. Not ſo analogical as abſterge.

ABSTE'RSIVE, Adj. [abſterſivus, Lat. from abſtergo] endued with the quality of cleanſing.

⁂ ABSTHA'NES, S. [from abs and thane, Sax. a king's miniſter] a lower kind of nobility, formerly in Scotland, but now extinct.

AB'STINENCE, S. [abſtinentia, Lat.] in a general ſenſe, the refraining from any thing to which we have a propenſity: uſed with the particle from. In a more limited ſenſe, faſting, or the forbearance of neceſſary food: diſtinguiſhed from temperance, as that implies a moderate uſe of food, but this a total avoiding of it, for a time. It is a virtue of great ſervice to perſons of ſedentary life, and numerous inſtances could be produced of its efficacy in the cure of chronical diſeaſes, and in lengthening out the ſhort ſpan of human exiſtence.

AB'STINENCY, S. [abſtinentia, Lat.] the ſame as abſtinence: "were our rewards for the abſtinencies, &c. Ham. Fundam. A word, at preſent, out of uſe.

AB'STINENT, Part. preſ. [abſtinens, Lat. temperate, modeſt, in oppoſition to rapacious, covetuous, or luxurious, whether applied to perſons or things.

ABSTO'RTED, Part. [abſtortus, Lat.] plucked, torn, or forced from another, by violence.

To ABSTRA'CT, V. Act. [⁂ abſtrabo, Lat. to draw from] to take one thing from another: figuratively, to ſeparate, followed by the particle from: uſed abſolutely, the exerciſe of the faculty of the mind, named abſtraction; or ſeparating ideas from one another. When applied to books or writings, to reduce their ſubſtance to fewer words, and leſs compaſs.

A'BSTRACT, Part. [abſtractus, Lat. See To ABSTRA'CT] ſeparated from ſomething elſe; generally applied to the operations of the mind. Abſtract terms, are thoſe which ſignify the mode or quality of a being without any regard to the ſubject in which it inheres: it is uſed with the particle from. Abſtract mathematics, thoſe branches which conſider the quantity, without reſtriction to any particular ſpecies of it. Abſtract numbers, are aſſemblages of units, conſidered in themſelves, without being applied to any ſubject.

A'BSTRCT, S. [from, to abſtract] a compendious view of a treatiſe, more ſuperficial than an abridgment: figuratively, applied to perſons, thoſe who comprehend all the qualities, good or bad, to be found in the ſpecies: "a man who is the abſtract of all faults, all men follow." Shakeſp. Anton. and Cleop. An abſtract ſtate, in alluſion to the faculty of abſtraction: "if they be conſidered in the abſtract. Wotton. In a particular ſenſe, an idea formed in the mind, on conſidering a mode, or quality, ſeparate from all the particular ſubjects in which it inheres: thus magnitude is an abſtract, when conſidered without being attached to any particular body.

ABSTRA'CTED, Part. [from abſtract] ſeparated, refined, or abſtruſe: a diſpoſition of mind, whereby a perſon is inattentive to external objects, tho' preſent: "an abſtracted ſcholar."

ABSTRA'CTEDLY, Adv. [⁂ from abſtract and ly, of lic or lice, Sax. implying manner] in an abſtract manner, diſtinct, or ſeparate from contingent circumſtances.

ABSTRA'CTION, S. [abſtractio, Lat.] an operation, or faculty of the mind, whereby we ſeparate things naturally exiſting together, form and conſider ideas thus ſeparated. This is performed, 1ſt, by conſidering one part of a thing, in ſome reſpects diſtinct from the whole: 2dly, by conſidering a mode, diſtinct from the ſubſtance in which it inheres; or ſeveral modes which exiſt together: as geometricians, when they conſider a line, omitting the ideas of length and breadth: 3dly, when the mind forms general and univerſal ideas, by leaving out thoſe ideas in which they differ, retaining thoſe only in which they agree, and connecting them into one complex idea, by giving them one name. Abſtraction is ſometimes uſed for the exerciſe of this faculty. The ſtate of being inattentive to external objects, or abſence of mind. In pharmacy, the drawing off, or exhaling a menſtruum from the ſubject it was intended to abſolve.

‡ ABSTRACTI'TIOUS, Adj. [from abſtract] in pharmacy, the native ſpirit of vegetables in contradiſtinction to that which is procured by fermentation.

ABSTRA'CTIVE, Adj. [from abſtract] indued with the power of abſtracting.

ABSTRU'SE, Adj. [abſtrus Fr. abſtruſo It. abſtruſo Sp. of abſtruſus Lat.] obſcure, dark; not eaſy to be underſtood; deep, hidden, or far removed from the common apprehenſions or ways of conceiving.

ABSTRU'SENESS, or ABSTRUSITY [S. difficulty, darkneſs, obſcurity, hard to be underſtood, or comprehended.

ABSTU'SELY, Adv. obſcurely, unintelligibly.

ADULTERA'TION, S. [adultératio, Lat.] the act of corrupting by a foreign mixture; or endeavouring to make things paſs for more than their intrinſic value, by its reſemblance to ſomething better. A thing which is debaſed, or in a debaſed ſtate. "Such tranſlations are "like the adulteration of the nobleſt wines." Felton's Claſſ.

ADU'LTERER, S. [adulter, Lat.] the perſon guilty of lying with his neighbour's wife.

ADU'LTERESS, S. [from adulter, and eſs, Fr. termination, ſignifying a female, from ix Lat. denoting the ſame] a woman guilty of the crime of violating her huſband's bed, by lying with another man.

ADU'LTERINE Adj. [adulterine, Fr. of adulterinus, Lat.] in Common Law, a child got in adultery.

ADU'LTEROUS, Adj. [from adulter, and the Latin termination oſus, which ſignifies a vitious quality] guilty of adultery. Baſe and corrupted; idolatrous; the Jews being in Scripture language underſtood to be under a contract with the Deity, not unlike that of matrimony. "An adulterous generation ſeeketh a ſign." Matt. xii. 39.

ADU'LTERY, S. [adultérium, Lat.] in its primary ſignification, the crime of being falſe to the marriage-bed. Figuratively, idolatry.

To ADU'MBRATE, V. A. [adumbro, of ad and umbra, Lat. a ſhadow] to ſhadow; to give a ſlight reſemblance, or faint likeneſs, alluding to that of ſhadows, with reſpect to the bodies by which they are formed.

ADUMBRA'TION, S. [from adumbrate] the act of giving a ſlight repreſentation, or illuſtration. "To make ſome adumbration of "that we mean." Bac. Nat. Hiſt. An imperfect reſemblance, like that of a ſhadow. A faint glimmering, a diſtant and confuſed likeneſs. In Heraldry, when any figure in a coat is ſo obſcured, that nothing but the bare profile, or outline, is viſible.

AD'VOCATE, S. [advocátus, Lat.] in the general import of the word, one who has the pleading or management of the cauſe; in a more confined ſenſe, the patron of it. One who vindicates, or anſwers objections made againſt any tenet, or action. This term is in Scripture, applied in both the first senses to Christ. "We have an advocate with the Father." 1 John, ii. 1. Used with the particle for, before the person or thing, for which the plea is used. "Advocates for folly." Pope. Lord Advocate, one of the officers of state in Scotland, who gives his advice in all cases about making or executing laws, defends the king's rights in all public meetings, prosecutes all capital crimes before the justiciary; concurs in all pursuits, wherein the king has interest; and is at liberty to plead all causes, unless when acting as an ordinary lord of sessions, in which case he can plead only the king's. Advocate, in Church History, a person appointed to defend the rights of a church or religious house.

ADVO'CATION, S. [from advocate] the office of an advocate. "My advocation is not "now in tune." Othel.

ADVO'UTRY. S. [avoutrie, Fr.] adultery.

ADVOWE', S. [advoué, or avoué, Fr. from avouér, Fr. to confess] he that has the right of advowson.

ADVO'WSON, or ADVO'WSEN, a right to present to a benefice, in the Common Law, because those who had obtained the right of presenting to a living, were generally great benefactors to it. Cowell.

To ADU'RE, V. N. [aduro, Lat.] to consume by fire, to burn up. "Such a degree of heat, which doth mellow and not adure." Bac. Nat Hist.

ADU'ST, Part. [aduſtus, Lat. from aduro] burnt up, scorched, and thereby rendered brittle. "Such a heat as will not render the body aduſt, or fragile." Bac. Able to burn, scorching hot. In Medicine, and Philosophy, those humours and that habit of body which arises from a fermentation of choler and bile; and betoken warmth of temper, choleric.

ADU'STED, Part. [from aduſt] burnt, or set on fire. Warm, with respect to the humours of the body, or temper.

ADU'STABLE, Adj. [from aduſt] that which may be burnt or scorched up.

ADU'STION, S. [from aduſt] the act of burning up, or drying. Applied to the blood, is the evaporating its most subtle particles by heat, and leaving the grosser, as half-parched. In Physic, an inflammation about the brain and its membranes, attended with a hollowness in the eyes, a pale colour, and a dryness of the body.

Æ, a dipthongue, wherein the sound of the A is very obscure, used by the Romans and Saxons, but seems now quite out of use among modern writers, being changed for the simple e, as in equator, equinoctial and even in Eneas

ÆA'CA, S. [from Æacus] a solemn feast, celebrated at Ægina, in honour of Æchus their king; who, on account of his impartial distribution of justice to his subjects, is supposed, by the antients, to be constituted one of the judges in the world of spirits.

ÆCHMALOTA'RCHIA, or ÆCHM'OLOTARCH, S. [αιχμαλοταρχος, Gr. from αιχμη, a fight, and αρχων, a chief] in History, the chief or leader, chosen by the Jews to govern them in the Babylonish captivity, when they refused to follow Zorobabel; called by them ראש גלות Roſh Galoth. Heb. from ראש. Heb. Chald. and Syr. or רישׁ. Arab. a prince, or chief, גלות Heb. captivity, i. e. the chief of the captivity.

Æ'DES, S. [Lat.] in Roman antiquity, a chapel distinguished from a temple, on account of its not being consecrated.

Æ'DILE, S. [of ædes, Lat. a temple] a Roman magistrate, deriving their name from their being surveyors of the buildings, both public and private; such as baths, aquæducts, bridges, and roads; they inspected the weights and measures; took cognizance of disorderly houses; revised all plays before their being exhibited; had the care of the acts of the senate, and the examination of all books, which were intended for publication.

Æ'GILOPS, S. [αγιλωψ, Gr. a goat's eye, from αιγος, Gr. and ωψ, an eye, that animal being supposed to be very subject to this disorder] in Medicine, a tumour or ulcer in the great angle or corner of the eye, either with, or without an inflammation.

Æ'GIPAN, S. [from αιγος, Gr. a goat, and Pan] a term applied to Pan and other satyrs, who are supposed not to have a human face, like the Sylvans, but that of a goat; the upper part of their body resembling that animal, and the lower painted with a fish's tail.

Æ'GIS, S. [from αιγος, Gr. a goat] in Mythology, the name given to the shield or buckler of Jupiter, or Pallas. It derives its name from Jupiter's covering his shield with the skin of the goat Amalthea, which he is reported to have sucked. This buckler he afterwards gave to Minerva, whose shield is called by this name.

Æ'GLOGUE, S. [from αιγος, Gr. a goat, and λογος, a discourse] a species of poetry, wherein rustics are introduced as the actors. In its primary signification, it signified a dialogue in verse, between goatherds: from Theocritus, the author of this species of poetry, having introduced those characters therein; but now it goes by the denomination of a pastoral, or poem wherein the persons are shepherds; from the Lat. paſtor, a shepherd.

ÆGYPTI'ACUM, [Lat. Egyptian, so called from its black colour, in allusion to that of the Egyptians] in Pharmacy, an ointment, originally ascribed to Mesue, compounded of vinegar, verdegrease, and honey, boiled to a consistence. The scum is called mel Egyptiacum, or Ægyptian honey.

ÆNI'GMA, S. [αινιγμα, from αινος, Gr. an obscure speech] a proposition put in obscure, and often contradictory terms, in order to exercise the sagacity of a person; or an obscure description of a thing, delivered in such terms, as render the explication difficult, and the meaning not intelligible at first sight. The eastern nations seem to have affected this species of writing very much; an example of it may be found in Judg. xiv. 12.

Æ'OLUS, S. [from Æolus, in Mythology, he god of wind] the name of a ventilator, or a machine uſed to extract foul air out of rooms, called Tidd's Æolus, from the inventor.

Æ'OLIPILE, S. [Αιολος πυλαι, Æolus's gates, from Αιολος, Æolus, the God of winds, and πυλαι gates] an hydrolic inſtrument, conſiſting of a hollow copper ball, with a ſlender neck and pipe, having a ſmall orifice; which being filled with water, and very much heated by fire, will afford a vapour, which iſſues out with a prodigious violence and noiſe. The ſtronger the fire, the more violent will be the force of the ſtream, till the water is entirely evaporated. It is filled by heating it red hot, and holding the pipe under water, which will aſcend by the preſſure of the atmoſphere.

Æ'ON, S. [αιων, Gr, an age] litterally, duration; but by ſome antient heretics, which are ſuppoſed to follow Simon Magus, was applied to the divine ideas, which they realiſed or conſidered as diſtinct beings from the Deity, produced by him, both male and female, and compoſing his eſſence, when formed into one aſſemblage or union. Valentinus refined on this hereſy very much, and produced a genealogy of theſe Æons, to the number of thirty.

Æ'RA, S. [Lat. of uncertain etymology. Sepulveda ſuppoſes it to be compoſed of the abbreviature, A. ER. A. annus ætat. Auguſti: occaſioned by the Spaniards beginning their computation from the time they were ſubject to Auguſtus. Voſſius is of the ſame opinion. Iſidore derives it from æra, the plural of æs, or the tribute-money with which Auguſtus taxed the world] in Chronology, a fixed point of time, from which any computation commences or begins.

ÆRA'RIUM, S. [Lat. from æs copper, which was the only money in uſe till the 485th year of Rome] the public treaſury of the Roman ſtate, like our bank, or exchequer; it was erected under Auguſtus, and maintained by yearly voluntary contributions, and guarded by three of the emperor's life-guards, ſtiled præfecti ærarii.

AE'RIAL, Adj. [aérius, Lat.] conſiſting of air, "Vegetables abound more with aerial "particles," Arbuth. Produced by the air. Inhabiting the air. "Aerial animals may be "ſubdivided into birds and flies," Locke. Placed in the air; lofty; high.

AE'RIAL PERSPECTIVE, the art of giving a proper diminution to the ſhades and light of colours, and ſize of objects, in proportion to the ſuppoſed diſtance of the object from the eye.

AE'RIANS, S. [aeriani from Aerius] a religious ſect in the fourth century, who derived their name from Aerius their founder. Their tenets reſembled thoſe of the Arians with reſpect to the Trinity; beſides which, they held that prieſt and biſhop were ſynonymous terms, and denoted but one order and dignity.

A'ERIE, S. [airie, Fr.] a neſt appropriated to hawks, and other birds of prey.

AERO'LOGY, S. [αηρ, Gr. air, and λογος, Gr. a diſcourſe] a diſcourſe on the nature and properties of the air.

A'EROMANCY, S. [from αηρ, Gr. air, and μαντις, divination] the art of divining or foretelling by the air.

AERO'METRY S. [from αηρ, Gr. and μετρεω, Gr. to meaſure] the art of meaſuring the air, comprehending the laws of motion, gravitation, preſſion, elaſticity, rarefaction, condenſation, &c. See Pneumatics.

AERO'SCOPY, S. [αηρ, Gr. air, and σκοπεω, to look into] the obſervation of the air.

ÆRU'GINOUS, Adj. [from aerugo] reſembling or belonging to the ruſt of copper, Applied to colour; it is by ſome deſcribed as a green, and by others as a brown.

ÆRU'GOS, S. [Lat.] ruſt, particularly that of copper; verdegreaſe.

ÆS USTUM, [Lat.] burnt or calcined copper] in Chemiſtry, made of thin plates of copper put into a crucible, with alternate layers of ſulphur and ſalt, and continued on a hot charcoal fire, till the ſulphur is conſumed.

ÆSCHYNO'MENOUS, Part. [αισχυνομαι, aſhamed; this plant ſhrinking as if affected with that paſſion at the approach] in Botany, applied to thoſe plants called Senſative.

ÆSTIMA'TIO CAPITIS, [Lat. the eſtimation, or value ſet upon a perſon's head] a fine antiently ordained to be paid for offences according to the quality of the complainants.

AE'STUARY, S. [æſtuarium, Lat.] in Geography, an arm of the ſea, running a good way into the land. In Pharmacy, a vapour bath.

Æ'THER, S, [αιθηρ, Gr. from αιθειν, to burn or flame, Anaxagoras ſuppoſing it to be of the nature of fire] in Phyſics, a thin, ſubtile matter, finer and rarer than air, commencing from the limits of our atmoſphere, and expanded through all the regions of ſpace.

ÆTHE'RIAL, Adj. [ætherius, Lat.] ſomething which belongs to, or partakes of the nature of æther, Ætherial ſpace, or region, is that ſpace in the heavens, where the pure unmixed æther is ſuppoſed to be found; and, figuratively, is uſed for heavenly. Ætherial oil, in Chemiſtry, named likewiſe eſſential; is a fine ſubtile, eſſential oil, approaching nearly to the nature of a ſpirit. The pure liquor, which riſes next after the ſpirit, in diſtilling turpentine, is termed the ætherial oil of turpentine.

ÆTHIOPS-MINERAL, [compound word; it derives its name from its colour, which is black, and ſuppoſed to reſemble the complexion of the Æthiopians] in Pharmacy, a preparation of equal quantities of quickſilver and flour of brimſtone, ground in a ſtone or iron mortar, till they become black, and no particles of quickſilver remain viſible. It is preſcribed as an ointment in the itch, and other cutaneous eruptions.

ÆTIO'LOGY, S. [Αιτιολια, Gr. from αιτια, Gr. a cauſe, and λογος, Gr. a diſcourſe] in Medicine, a diſcourſe, explaining the cauſes of a diſeaſe.

ÆTI'TES, S. [of αετος, Gr. an eagle, from the vulgar opinion of its being found in an eagle's neſt] an oval incruſtated ſtone of a dark ruſſet colour, hollow within, and including another ſtone, which on ſhaking it, rattles; near Trevoux in France, they are very plenty.

ÆTNA, S. [from αιθω, of αιθειν, Gr. to burn, or אתון, Heb. a furnace] a burning mountain, the higheſt of any in Sicily. The inhabitants call it Monte Gibello, or, by contraction, Mon-Gibello, i. e. the Mount of Mounts; for the Saracens, when maſters of Sicily, called it Gibel; pronounced by the Germans Gebel, or Gipſel, the ſummit of a hill, ſo that the name Monte, Italian for a mount, ſeems, when joined to the Saracen, to denote both the great impreſſion its ravages made on their minds, and likewiſe to ſhew, that, in making a compound of two words in different languages, which imply the ſame thing, they were not very nice in their obſervation of analogy. Its aſcent from Catanea is 30,000 paces, but on the ſide next Randazzo only 20,000; its circumference, at the bottom, is about 100,000; it is of a circular form, and terminates in a peak, reſembling a ſugar-loaf. The bottom is planted with corn and ſugar-cane, the middle with woods, olive-trees, and vines, and the top is covered with ſnow all the year. Its moſt remarkable irruptions are thoſe of 1159, 1329, 1408, 1444, 1447, 1536, 1537, 1554, 1669, 1693, and its laſt conſiderable eruption 1753. Sometimes, as in 1536, 1537, and 1669, a dreadful ſtream of fire iſſues from it, like that of Veſuvius. The prodigious quantity of burning matter ejected, and the earthquakes attending its erruptions, have occaſioned terrible devaſtation and calamities. During that of 1693, fifteen or ſixteen towns, eighteen eſtates, with men and cattle, beſides villages, and 93,000 ſouls, were deſtroyed.

Confirmation, in oppoſition to repeal. In Grammar, what is otherwiſe called a verb, becauſe it expreſſes what we affirm or aſſert of any ſubject. Thus "Pitt endeareth." Endeareth is an affirmation, becauſe it aſſerts, or affirms the quality of endearing to be in Pitt. In a legal ſenſe, the method by law allowed to the Quakers as a pledge of their truth in judicial courts, inſtead of an oath, which they hold to be inconſiſtent with Chriſt's command; "Swear "not at all." If they make a falſe affirmation, they are ſubject to the penalties of perjury: but this is only with regard to oaths of allegiance, and on public occaſions; for in criminal caſes their affirmation is not taken in evidence.

AFFI'RMATIVE, Adj. [from affirm] that which poſitively affirms or aſſerts a thing, in oppoſition to negative. Applied to perſons, poſitive; obſtinate in opinion; dogmatical; or one that would affirm any thing. Affirmative in Algebra, applied to quantities, are thoſe which expreſs a real magnitude, in oppoſition to thoſe which are negative, or leſs than nothing. Affirmative ſign in Algebra, is that which ſhews that the quantity, it is prefixed to, is affirmative, and is marked thus +.

AFRO'NT, Adv. [à front, Fr. to the face] in the front. See Affront.

A'FRICA, S. [Αφρικη, Gr. from a, Gr. negative, and φρικη, Gr. cold] one of the four principal parts of the world; bounded on the N. by the Mediterranean, on the E. by the Red Sea, and on the S. and W. by the main ocean. It extends from the 35th degree S. to the 37th N. latitude; being from N. to S. 72 degrees, or about 4320 miles; from E. to W. it reaches from 17 W. to 60 E. or 77 degrees of longitude, i. e. 4620 miles. Its ſituation for commerce is preferable to either of the other quarters of the world; as it ſtands in the center, and has a nearer communication with Europe, Aſia, and America, than any other quarter with reſpect to the others. It is furniſhed with the greateſt and moſt convenient navigable rivers; is populous beyond credibility; its ſoil is fruitful, and produces corn, in abundance. Gums, ivory, wax, civet, and oſtrich feathers are in ſuch quantities, that they never can be exhauſted by the hand of profuſion. They have very rich mines of copper; and as for gold and ſilver, there is no country in the world that can produce more. The Nubian geographer tells us, that the king of Guinea has a maſs of gold, of thirty pounds weight, which was naturally produced in the mines, and is completely tough and malleable, without ever having been refined, or melted. The trade with Africa, in its preſent ſtate, is of as great advantage as any we carry on, as it is almoſt all profit; the firſt coſt being ſome of our own manufactures, for which we have in return gold, teeth, wax, and negroes. The laſt article are the hands by which our plantations are improved, and ſuch quantities of ſugar, tobacco, cotton, &c. raiſed, which employ a great quantity of ſhipping, become a nurſery for ſailors, an encouragement for manufactories, the ſource of wealth and power to this kingdom, and the means of its being able, at preſent, to give laws to the whole world. We owe the extenſion of this valuable trade, to one Mr. Thomas Cumings, a quaker, who projected the taking of Goree and Senegal, and by that means has opened a ſource of wealth, till then unknown; but at preſent ſenſibly felt by almoſt every individual in this nation.

AF'TER, Prep. [from after, Sax. afar or afarub, Goth. ehre, Arm. abar, Per.] it is applied both to time and place. Applied to time, it denotes that ſomething had been done before. Joined with verbs, it has a reference to time, with ſucceeding or following. "On "ſecond ſabbath after the firſt." Luke vi. 1. Applied to place, behind, or following. "That "he might bear it after Jeſus." Luke xxiii. 26. Concerning. "Thou enquireſt after my "iniquity." Job. x. 6. According to; agreeable to, in imitation of. "After the oriental "manner." Pope.

AF'TER, Adv. [it is diſtinguiſhed from the preposition, becauſe it has a relation to that which goes before it; but not to the ſentence which follows it] ſucceeding or following in time. A'FTER-ACCEPTATION, S. [from after and acceptation] a ſignification, which was not firſt admitted; but adopted in proceſs of time. "The church's after-acceptation." Dryd.

A'FTER-AGES, S. [from after and ages] ages which are to come, or future. "What "an opinion will after-ages entertain." Addiſ.

A'FTER-ALL, taking every thing into conſideration; in fine; notwithſtanding all that has been ſaid; at laſt. "After-all, if "they have any merit." Pope.

A'FTER-BIRTH, S. [from after and birth] in Midwifry, the coat, membrane, or caſe wherein the fœtus, or child, is incloſed in the womb, called the ſecundine, and deriving its name from its coming away after the birth of the child. See Heam.

A'FTER-CLAP, S. [from after and clap, of clap, Brit. a ſtroke] ſome unexpected incident after an affair is ſuppoſed to be ended. "For fear of after-claps." Spenſer. It is uſed in an ill ſenſe, but ſeems a low expreſſion.

A'FTER-COST, S. [from after and coſt] expences which are incurred after the original bargain or plan is finiſhed. "Leſt, your af- "ter-coſt and labour prove unſucceſsful." Mortimer.

A'FTER-CROP, S. [from after and crop] the ſecond crop or produce of a ground in one year.

To A'FTER-EYE, V. A. [from after and eye] to purſue with one's eye; to keep in view. "Left to after-eye him." Shakeſp.

A'FTER-GAME, S. [from after and game] an expedient after the original plan or firſt attempt has miſcarried. — "Still there remains "an after-game to play." Addiſ. Cato.

A'FTER-HOURS, S. [ſeldom uſed in the ſingular, from after and hours] the hours which ſucceed or follow any action. "That after- "hours with ſorrow chide us not." Rom. and Juliet.

AF'TER-NOON, S. [from after and noon] that ſpace, or interval, which is from twelve at noon to the evening. "On dice and drink, "and drabs, they ſpend the afternoon." Dryd. Figuratively, in the decline, "Even in the "afternoon of her beſt days." Shak. Richt. III.

A'FTER-PA'INS, S. [never uſed in the ſingular, from after and pains] In Midwifry, thoſe pains which are felt in the loins, groin, &c. after delivery, proceeding from a diſtenſion of the ligaments of the uterus.

A'FTER-PART, S. [from after and part] the decline or latter part. "In the after-part "reaſon and foreſight begin a little to take "place." Locke.

A'FFER-PROOF, S. [from after and proof] evidence, following that which has been produced. "Under the expectation of his after- "proof." Wotton.

A'FTER-TASTE, S. [from after and taſte] that taſte which is perceived by the organs of ſenſation after, which was not ſenſible during the act of drinking.

A'FTER-THOUGHT, S. [from after and thought] an expedient formed too late; reflection, or thought ariſing after the finiſhing of a thing: not properly uſed for ſecond thought, as that is generally taken in a good ſenſe, but this in a bad one. Repentance. "Expence, and "after-thought, and idle care." Dryd.

A'FTER-TIMES, S. [from after and times. Seldom uſed in the ſingular] future ages; in time to come. "In after-times ſhall not hold "the world in awe." Dryd.

A'FTERWARD, or A'FTERWARDS, Adv. [from after and weard, Sax. of wairth, or wairths, Goth.] in ſucceeding, or future time, referring to ſomething which preceded, and which it is ſuppoſed to follow. "Pre-"pare thy work, and afterward build thy "houſe." Prov. xxiv. 27.

A'FTER-WIT, S. [from after and wit] an unſeaſonable expedient, or a contrivance which is too late, "After-wit comes too "late." L'Eſtrange.

A'FTER-WRATH, S. [from after and wrath] anger, when the provocation ſeems paſt. "T'excuſe their after-wrath."

A'GA, S. [Arab. lord] a title uſed among the Mogols and Turks, for a commander.

AGAI'N, Adv. [agen, Sax. igien, Dan. of æc, Sax. one more, and æne, Sax. one, according to Skinner] a ſecond time, implying the repetition of the ſame action. "I will not "again curſe, nor again ſmite." Gen. viii. 21. At the beginning of a ſentence, it imports an addition to what has been ſaid before. "Again I will be to him a father." Heb. i. 5. On the other hand, denoting a correſpondence or reciprocation of action. "His fortune "worked upon his nature, and his nature "again upon his fortune." Johnſ. Dict. After aſk, a return of a thing given. "I did "never aſk it you again." Shakeſp. King John. Return, by way of recompence; or reimburſement. "That he hath given, he "will pay again." Prov. xix. 27. After much, or words implying dimenſion, a repetition of the ſame quantity which preceded. "As large and as deep again as ours." Dryd. "Want as much again to manage it." Pope.

When doubled, it implies frequent repetition. "It muſt be repeated again and again."

AGA'INST, Prep. [agen, ongean, Sax. gegen, Teut.] uſed of perſons in oppoſition, alluding to the poſition of two armies ready to attack each other. "He that is not with me, "is againſt me." Matth. xii. 30. After ſpeak, to be repreſented in a bad light. "This "ſect is every where ſpoken againſt." Acts xxviii. 22. Applied to motion, contrary direction; or that in which one body meets with another. "Trouts and ſalmons ſwim againſt "the ſtream." Bac. Cloſe to, joining, or contiguous. "The picture hangs againſt the "wall." Immediately preceding; previous to, or near. "Againſt that ſeaſon comes." Shakeſp. Ham.

AGA'LLOCHUM, S. a ſpecies of aloes wood, in the Eaſt-Indies, ſpotted with various colours, odoriferous, and acrimonius to the taſte; it yields abundance of ſap when put on the fire, which is, by French phyſicians, reckoned a very powerful cardiac. See Aloes.

A'GAPE', S. [from αγαπη, Gr. love] love feaſts, exerciſed by the primitive Chriſtians; originally of ſuch ſervice, that they cauſed the admiration of the Heathens, but being attended with ſome incidents which are better gueſſed at, than mentioned, the whole was at length diſuſed.

AGA'PE, Adv. [from a and gape, from gape, Iſl. glapan, Sax. gaepen, Belg. to ſet any thing, and particularly the mouth, wide open] a ſtupid kind of admiration; wondering, as expreſſed by the ignorant, with open mouths. "The whole croud ſtood agape." Spect. No. 572.

AGA'RIC, S. [agaricus, Lat.] in Botany, an excreſcence growing in the ſhape of a muſhroom, upon the trunk and great branches of the oak and other trees, but the larch-tree eſpecially. Thoſe who would ſee its merits diſcuſſed with candour, and eſtabliſhed by experiments, need only peruſe, A treatiſe on the Agaric of the Oak, by Mr. Neal, ſurgeon to one of our London hoſpitals, a gentleman of eminent abilities in his profeſſion. Mineral Agaric, is a kind of ſtone found in the clefts of rocks in Germany; when it is firſt found, it is white, and of the conſiſtence of curdled milk; whence it is called lac lunæ, or milk of the moon; lithomagra, or marrow-ſtone; by drying, it becomes brittle, and reſembles the natural Agaric, on which account it has received its name.

AGA'ST, Adv. [from a and gaſt, a ſpectre, i. e. terrified as if one had ſeen a ſpectre or ghoſt, according to Skinner: but is it not more natural to derive it from αγαζομαι, Gr. to look upon with amaze] with all the ſigns of a perſon who is terrified at the ſight of ſome dreadful object. "With ſhudd'ring horrour "pale, and eyes agaſt." Par. Loſt.

A'GATE, S. [agate, Fr. agat, Belg. of αχατης, Gr.] a precious ſtone of the flint kind, much harder than jaſper, and receives a better poliſh. Its colours are various, and in ſome of them repreſent ſuch figures as are very ſurpriſing. Agate, likewiſe, among the gold Wire-drawers, is the inſtrument they make uſe of in burniſhing, and derives its name from the agate ſtone, which is in the middle, and forms the moſt conſiderable part of it.

A'GATY, Adj. [from agate] partaking of the nature of Agate. "An agaty flint." Woodw.

AGA'VE, S. [Lat.] in Botany, the common American aloe. This is the 390th genus of Linnæus, who has ſeparated it from the aloe, among which they were claſſed before, becauſe the ſtamina and ſtyle in their flowers are extended much longer than the corolla, and they reſt upon the germen.

AGA'ZED, Part. [from agaze] ſtruck with a ſudden terror; terrified to ſtupidity. "All "the whole army ſtood agazed at him." Shakeſp. Hen. VI.

AGE, S. [from age, Fr. atha, Sax. or æ, Run. and Dan. always] any limited part of duration, or time, applied both to perſons and things. "His life being ſeven ages." Shakeſ. The number of years of which a perſon's life conſiſts; the period of his exiſtence. "The "whole age of Jacob was 147 years." Gen. xlvii. 28. The advanced part of a long life; that ſtate of life wherein a perſon has ſeen a great number of years, in oppoſition to youth. The ſpace of 100 years. In Horſemanſhip, the method of diſtinguiſhing how many years the horſe is old from his teeth, hoofs, coat, tail, and eyes. In Hunting, is in a hart diſcovered by the furniture of his head. In Aſtronomy, applied to the moon, it is the number of days elapſed ſince the laſt conjunction, or full moon, ſtiled her quarter. In Chronology, a certain period of years paſſed ſince the creation. This by ſome is reduced to three portions; viz. the age of the law of nature, from Adam to Moſes; the age of the Jewiſh law, from Moſes to Chriſt; and the age of grace, from thence to the preſent glorious year 1760. Others divide this grand period into ſix ages; the 1ſt, from the creation to the deluge, contains 1656 years. 2d, From thence to Abraham's entering the promiſed land, 426 years. 3d, To the deliverance from Egypt, 430. 4th, To the foundation of Solomon's temple, 467. 5th, To the foundation of the temple in the Babyloniſh captivity, 424. And the 6th, From the Babyloniſh captivity to the birth of Chriſt, including 484 years. The poets divide the world into four ages; called the Golden, Silver, Brazen, and Iron age. Age in Law, is that time of life at which a perſon is qualified to aſſume and exerciſe certain offices of ſociety, which before he was, for want of years, incapable of. The age of twenty-one is the full age, when a man or woman may contract and manage for themſelves with reſpect to their eſtates.

A'GED, Adj. [from age] that which has lived a long courſe, or ſeries of years, generally applied to animals. "The grey headed and "very

"very aged men." Job. xv. 20. Figuratively, that which has ſtood for many years; decayed by length of time, applied to inanimate things. "Of the aged oaks." Stillingf.

A'GEDLY, Adv. [from aged, and ly of lic, Sax. like, or manner] after the manner of a perſon advanced in years, or in the decline of life.

AGE'N, Ad. [agen, Sax.] a repetition of the ſame deed; ſomething by way of reply to what had been ſaid. "Thus her ſon reply'd "agen." Dryd. This is the true ſpelling, though now uſed only by poets for the ſake of rhime. See Again.

AGEMO'GLANS, AZAMO'GLANS, S. [from אגם agem, Arab. a barbarian, and עגלן, Arab. a child] children of tribute, taken every third year by the grand ſignior's officers, from thoſe Chriſtians whom he tolerates in his dominions; they always claim one in three, which are generally choſen for their beauty and vivacity: As ſoon as ſeized on, they are conveyed to Gallipoli or Conſtantinople, circumciſed, inſtructed in the Mahomedan religion, taught the Turkiſh language and military diſcipline, and placed among the troops called the Janniſaries. Such as are not fit for the army, are employed in the loweſt and moſt ſervile offices in the ſeraglio.

A'GENCY, S. from agent] the quality of acting; action; the ſtate of being in, or exerting action. "The ſuperintendence and "agency of Providence." Woodw.

AGENHI'NE, S. [from agen, Sax. eygen, Teut. one's own, and hine, a ſervant] in Law, a gueſt at an inn, who after threee night's continuance therein, is deemed one of the family.

A'GENT, Part. [from agens, Lat. part. of ago, to act] that which acts, or is active, in oppoſition to patient, or paſſive. "The force "of imagination upon the body agent." Bac. Nat. Hiſt.

A'GENT, S. [agens, Lat.] a being indued with the power of action. "A miracle is a "work exceeding the power of any created "agent." South. In Phyſic, that which is endued with power to act on another, and to produce a change or alteration by ſuch action. The ſchools divide agents into natural, or free. Natural, are thoſe which are determined by the great author of nature to one ſort of effect, with an incapacity to perform any other, as fire to heat only, not to cool. A free agent is, that which may do or not do any action, and has the conſcious perception that his actions are cauſed by his own will, without any external neceſſity, or determination whatever. If there were no free agents, all would be mere mechaniſm, and the beſt and nobleſt part of nature would be cut off: There would be no creatures capable of gratitude or reaſonable obedience to the Deity. In Commerce, an agent, is a perſon intruſted with tranſacting buſineſs for another at a diſtance, or the negociation of the affairs of a ſtate or corporation. Likewiſe, the perſon who takes care of the affairs of a prince at a foreign court, a ſort of under-ambaſſador, from whom he is diſtinguiſhed, as not making a public entry, not aſſuming the character of the king's repreſentative, and not endued with ſo ample a power.

A'GENT and PA'TIENT, [in Law] is a perſon who does or gives ſomething to himſelf, being, both the doer of a thing and the party to whom it is done. Thus, a creditor, being left executor, he may retain ſo much of the eſtate of the deceaſed, as will pay his debt, and by that means become both agent and patient, i. e. the party to whom the debt is due, and the perſon who pays it.

To AGGLO'MERATE, V. A. [agglomero, Lat.] to gather up in a ball; to gather together.

To AGGLO'MERATE, V. N. to cluſter together, applied to the ſwarming of bees. Figuratively, to ſtick together ſo as to compoſe one maſs. "The hard agglomerating ſalts." Themſ.

AGGLU'TINANTS, S. [agglutinans, from ad to, and gluten, glue] in its primary ſignification, thoſe ſubſtances which have a quality of glueing, or ſticking any bodies together. In Phyſic, ſtrengthening medicines, which adhering to the ſolids in the human body, recruit, and ſupply what is waſted in the animal action.

To AGGLU'TINATE, V. A. [ſee Agglutinants] to unite one part to another, as it were, with glue; to make one part ſtick to another. "Agglutinating to thoſe parts." Harvey. Uſed with the particle to.

AGGLUTINA'TION, S. [from agglutinate] in its primary ſignification, to join two bodies faſt together. "The occaſion of its "not healing by agglutination." Wiſem. Surg.

AGGLU'TINATIVE, Adj. [from agglutinate] in Medicine, that which has the power of thickening the animal juices, ſo as to render them fit for nouriſhing.

To AGGRANDI'ZE, V. A. [aggrandiſer, Fr.] to exalt, prefer, or make conſiderable by the addition of poſts and penſions. "Only to "aggrandize covetous churchmen." To enlarge, exalt, or ennoble, applied to the faculties and ſentiments of the mind.

AGGRANDI'ZEMENT, S. [from aggrandize] the act of promoting to a high place in a ſtate; or the act of conferring power, honour, and wealth, on a perſon; it includes in it a precedent baſeneſs, and carries the ſecondary idea of ſomething ſelfiſh.

AGGRANDI'ZER, S. [from aggrandize and er, implying agency, from wair, Goth. and wær, Sax] the perſon, who confers honour and riches on another, or one who makes great.

To AGGRA'TE, V. A. [of aggratare, Ital. gratus, Lat.] to ingratiate one's ſelf; to gain the eſteem of a perſon; applied to the addreſſes of a ſuitor to the object of his love. "Each one ſought his lady to aggrate." Fairy Queen.

To AGGRA'VATE, [aggravatum, ſupine of of aggravo, Lat. from ad, to, and gravis, heavy] to increaſe the weight of a thing; in its primary ſenſe. In its ſecondary or figurative ſenſe; to add to the enormity, applied to crimes. "Aggravating crimes encreaſe their "fears." Dryd. To heighten, or render more painful, applied to puniſhment. "To "aggravate—Their penance." Milton.

AGGRAVA'TION, S. [from aggravate] the act of making worſe, applied to the demerit of actions. Some circumſtance which heightens the guilt of any crime, &c.

AGGRE'GATE, Adj. [aggregatus, Lat.] an aſſemblage, or collection of the particles into one maſs. "Aggregate forms of particu-"lar things." Ray.

AGGRE'GATE, S. [aggregatus, Lat.] an aſſemblage formed of ſeveral particulars. The ſum total, or reſult of ſeveral things added together.

To AGGRE'GATE, V. A. [aggrego, Lat.] to collect together ſeveral particulars into one ſum, or ſeveral parcels or particles into one maſs. "The aggregated ſoil." Par. Loſt.

AGGREGA'TION, S. [from aggregatio, Lat.] a whole made up of ſeveral parts added together. In Arithmetic, the ſum total, formed by the addition of ſeveral units together. In Phyſics, an aſſemblage of ſeveral things, which have no natural connection with each other, into one whole, as a maſs of ruins. Figuratively, the joining, enrolling, or admitting to a ſociety. "An aggregation of ſeveral doctors "to the faculty of laws."

To AGGRE'SS, V. A. [from aggreſſum, ſupine of aggredior, Lat. to attack, to ſet upon] to commit the firſt act of hoſtility; to make the firſt attack; to occaſion, or begin a quarrel; including the idea of blame with regard to the agent. "To turn the war and tell, aggreſ-"ſing France,— How Britain's ſons, and Bri-"tain's friends can fight."

AGGRE'SSION, S. [aggreſſio, Lat.] the act of beginning a quarrel, either with reſpect to private perſons or kingdoms, by being guilty of the firſt attack.

AGGRE'SSOR, S. [See Aggreſs] the perſon who commits the firſt act of hoſtility or injury. "We are in danger already of appear-"ing the firſt aggreſſors." Swift. †† With due deference to ſo great a genius, let it be obſerved, that the word firſt is uſed very improperly in this ſentence, it being included in the word aggreſſor itſelf.

AGGRIE'VANCE, S. [See Aggrieve] an action which cauſes pain, or uneaſineſs in the perſon to whom it is done, and includes in it the ſecondary idea of injury, or ſomething undeſerved.

To AGGRIE'VE, V. [from ag, for, ad, to, and grieve, formerly wrote greive from grever, Fr. to vex, of gravis, Lat. grievous] to do or ſay ſomething which ſhall make a perſon uneaſy. "Which yet aggrieves my heart." Spencer. To offer an injury, which ſhall occaſion vexation. N. B. In all theſe ſenſes, the idea of grief is included, as flowing from their diſagreeableneſs, or the inconvenience to which they ſubject the perſon who endures them.

To AGRO'UP, V. A. [agroppare, Ital.] in Painting, to join or introduce ſeveral figures in one piece. "Bodies of divers natures, which "are agrouped (or combined) together, are a-"greeable and pleaſant to the ſight." Dryd. Dufreſn.

AGHA'ST, Adv. [from αγαζομαι, Gr. to be aſtoniſhed; but according to Skinner, from a and ghaſt, Sax. and Goth. a ſpectre, or apparition or ghoſt; becauſe they who ſee thoſe ſights are affected with this paſſion] all the ſigns of a perſon terrified by an apparition like one who had ſeen a ghoſt. "With "dreary drooping eyne looked up like one "aghaſt." Spencer. Elegantly applied to inanimate things, as in the following ſentence to the earth at the reſurrection. "The aged "earth aghaſt.—Shall from the ſurface to the "center quake." Mil. Chr. Nat.

AGI'LD, Part. [agild, Sax. from a negative, and gild, Sax. a fine, or a price ſet on a perſon's life, from gildan, Sax. to pay] free from penalty, or not ſubject to the cuſtomary fines and taxes. Skinner ſays it is applied to outlaws, for whoſe death no compenſation need be made.

A'GILE, Adj. [of agile, Fr. ágiles, Lat.] active; acting with great ſpeed and readineſs; nimble. "Forwarned ſtruck his agile heels." Shakeſp. Hen. IV. Applied to the mind, alert, vigorous, in oppoſition to ſlow, and ſtupid.

A'GILENESS, S. [from agile and neſs, of NS. Goth. implying an abſtract quality] the quality of performing with ſpeed, quickneſs, or nimbleneſs.

AGI'LITY, S. [agilite, Fr. from ágilis, Lat. nimble] a capacity of moving without pain, or any other impediment.

A'GINCOURT, or AZINCOURT, S. a village of Ponthieu in Picardie, memorable for the glorious victory, which the Engliſh, under the command of Henry V. gained over the French, the 25th of October 1415, looſing only 1600 men, and killing 6000 of the enemy. Lat. 50 deg. 39. min. N. Long. 2. deg. 10 min. E.

A'GIO, S. [venet, aid or aſſiſtance] in Commerce, the exchange or difference between bank and current money, or caſh. Thus if a bargain be made to pay either 100 livres bank, or 105 caſh, the agio is ſaid to be 5 per cent. The agio varies almoſt every where; at Amſterdam it is uſually from 3 to 5 per cent. at Rome near 25 per 1500; at Venice 10 per cent, fixed; and at Genoa from 15 to 18. It likewiſe ſignifies the profit which ariſes from money advanced, and is the ſame as premium.

To AGI'ST, V. N. [according to Skinner, from giſte, Fr. a bed, or place to lie down in; but Kennet conjectures from ager, Lat. a field] in Common Law, to take in the cattle of ſtrangers into the King's foreſts, and collect the money due for it. Chart. de Foreſt, 9 Hen. III. c. 9.

AGI'STAGE, S. See Agiſtment.

AGI'S-

AGI'STER, S. [from agiſt and er, ſignifying an agent, from vair, Goth. wær, Sax. a man] in Common Law, officers appointed by patent, to take in and feed the cattle of ſtrangers, and collect the money ariſing from thence, of which there are four in every foreſt, where the king hath any pawnage, Manw. For. Laws. 80.

AGI'STMENT, S. [from agiſto] in Common Law, the feed of other people's cattle, taken into any ground, at a certain rate per week. In a large ſenſe, it extends to all manner of common or herbage, or the profits ariſing from thence. 2 Inſt. 643.

A'GITABLE, Adj. [agitabilis, Lat.] that which may be put into motion.

To A'GITATE, V. A. [agito, Lat.] to move by repeated actions. "The ſurface of the water is agitated by the winds." To ſhake ſo, as to put the particles of any liquor into motion, or fermentation. To actuate, act upon, or give motion to. To diſturb, or diſorder by the diſtractions of different motives. To toſs from one to another, to diſcuſs or controvert with great warmth.

AGITA'TION, S. [from agitatio, Lat.] the act of ſhaking or putting the particles of a body into motion. "Diſturbed by any agitation." Bac. Diſorder of the mind, ariſing from the violence of different paſſions. Conſideration, or deliberation of ſeveral perſons. "The "project now in agitation for repealing the "teſt." Swift.

AGITA'TOR, S. [from agitate] the perſon who projects any ſcheme; occaſions any diſturbance; or cauſes any motion. He who manages and conducts the affairs of another.

AGI'TO, S. a ſmall weight uſed in Pegu, two of which makes a bize, weighing 100 tecalis, or 2 lb. 5 oz. heavy weight, or 3 lb. 9 oz. light weight of Venice.

A'GLETS, S. [aiguillette, Fr.] a ſharp point, a tag, formed to reſemble ſome animal, but eſpecially a man. "His gown addreſſed "with aglets." Haywood. In Botany, the pendents hanging on the tips, or apices, of the chives, and ſtamina of flowers; as in the tulips, roſes, &c.

AGNA'TI, S. [from ad to, and naſcor, to be born] in the Roman law, the male deſcendants from the ſame father, diſtinguiſhed from cognati, which includes the female deſcendants.

AGNA'TION, S. [ſee Agnati] in the Civil Law, the relation between the deſcendants from the ſame father, including only males.

AGNI'NA MEMBRANA, or PELLICUDA, S. [in Anatomy] the membrane, including the fœtus, ſo named by Aetius, called likewiſe amnios.

AGNI'TION, S. [agnitum, Lat.] an acknowledging.

To AGNIZE, V. A. [from agnoſco, Lat.] to own; to avow; to acknowledge. "I do "agnize a natural and prompt alacrity—I find in boldneſs." Othello. Obſolete.

AGNO'MEN, S. [Lat. from ag for, ad to, and nomen, a name] an addition or name added to the ſirname of a perſon on account of ſome peculiar action, or circumſtance; as the addition of Africanus to the name of Scipio, on account of his exploits in Africa; and of Cicero to that of Tully, on account of a protuberance in his noſe, like a vetch, which Cicero ſignifies.

AGNOMINA'TION, S. [agnominátio, Lat.] the reſemblance or alluſion of one word to another, both in ſound and ſenſe. "Pleaſantly running upon agnominations." Camden.

AGNOE'TÆ, S. [ἀγνοῆται, Gr. from ἀγνοέω, Gr. to be ignorant of] in Hiſtory, a ſect of heretics, who held that Chriſt, with reſpect to his human nature, was ignorant of ſome things, and eſpecially the day of judgment.

A'GNUS-CASTUS, S. [from agnus, a lamb, and caſtus, chaſte] in Botany, called likewiſe vitex. Its leaves reſemble thoſe of the olive, but are ſomewhat longer; the bloſſoms are of a purple colour, and ſometimes white; it is reputed a cooler and preſerver of chaſtity, on which account the Athenian ladies uſed to lay on beds of it during the feaſt of Ceres; but modern practice ſeems to have entirely diſclaimed the uſe of it.

A'GNUS DEI, [Lat. the Lamb of God.] In the Roman church; a flat piece of white wax of an oval form, ſtampt with the figure of the lamb, and conſecrated by the pope. They are now prohibited to be brought into England, by 13 Eliz. c. 2.

AGO', Adv. [from agan, Sax. paſt; whence ſome counties ſtill pronounce it agone] paſt. "Some time ago." Addiſ.  When we reckon paſt time, towards, or ending with the preſent, we uſe ſince; as, "It is a year ſince it "happened." But when we reckon from the preſent, and end with the paſt, we uſe ago; as, "It happened three nights ago." This is a nicety, which foreigners ought peculiarly to attend to.

AGO'G, Adv. [agogo, Fr. as, ils vivent agogo, they live as they pleaſe, or according to their wiſhes] eager for the poſſeſſion of ſomething; longing. To ſet one's fancy or affections on. "On which the ſaints are all agog." Hudibraſs.

AGO'NE, Adv. [agan, Sax. paſt. See Ago] paſt, with reſpect to time; formerly. "As you ſpeak him along agone." Ben. Johnſon.

A'GONIST, S. [ſee Agoniſtes] a champion or contender for a prize.

AGONI'STES, S. [ἀγωνιστὴς, Gr.] one who uſed to exhibit at the public games of Greece and Rome; being a candidate for the prizes awarded for ſuperiority of ſtrength, &c. In alluſion to this Milton has ſtiled his tragedy Sampſon Agoniſtes.

AGONI'STICAL, [from agoniſtes] that which relates to prize-fighting.

AGONI'STICI, S. [Lat. from ἀγὼν, Gr. a combat] the name given by Donatus to thoſe of his ſect, whom he ſent into fairs and markets to propagate his doctrines, being, as the name imports, theological knights-errant.

To AGONI'ZE, [agoniſer, Fr. from αγωνιζω, Gr. of αγωνη, Gr. an agony] to be affected with acute and exceſſive pain. "To ſmart and "agonize at every pore." Pope.

A'GONY, S. [from αγων, a ſharp conteſt, or ſtruggle] exceſſive pain, wherein all the powers of nature are convulſed, and ſhe ſtruggles, as it were, with death for the maſtery.

AGO'NYCLITES, S. [from α neg. γονυ, a knee, and κλινω, Gr. to bend] a ſect in the ſeventeenth century, who derived their name from their diſtinguiſhing principle, never to kneel, but to ſay all their prayers ſtanding.

A'GRA, S. [Perſ.] the principal kingdom of the empire of the Mogul. It has Bando on the W. Dely on the N. Sambal on the E. Gualcar and part of Narvar on the S. Its quota of forces, to the Mogul's army, is 15,000 horſe, and 30,000 foot; and its revenue is computed at near three millions ſterling. Agra, its capital, founded in 1566, by Eckbar, or Eckbarat, is a place of great traffic, having merchants from China, Perſia, all parts of India, and from England and Holland. Its indigo is reckoned the very beſt in the world; beſides which, they export a great many ſtuffs and linens, tiſſues, lace, rice, and cotton. The number of its medians, or public bazars, covered bazans, or quarters for merchants, ſome of which are a quarter of a league long, together with its caravanſerahs, which are about eighty, are ſufficient to convince us both of the prodigious extent, and of the immenſe trade which is carried on in this city. Lat. 26 deg. 29 min. N. Long. 79 deg. 12 min. E.

To AGRA'CE, V. A. to grant favours to. Now obſolete.

AGRA'RIAN, Adj. [agrarius, Lat. of ager, a field] in the Roman Law, a term applied to ſuch laws, as relate to the diviſion and diſtribution of lands.

To AGRE'ASE, V. A. to greaſe, daub, or make filthy. Obſolete.

To AGRE'E, V. A. [agreér, Fr. from gré, liking, conſent, approbation, or good-will] to be friends, or in concord, i. e. a ſtate whereby the ſentiments of one perſon are ſimilar or the ſame as thoſe of another. "The more you "agree together, the leſs hurt can your enemies "do you." Pope. To conſent to do a thing upon certain conditions; to bargain. To reſemble; to be like. To match, applied to colour. Applied to the evidence of ſeveral perſons; to tally with; to be conſiſtent with; to accommodate a difference; to reconcile.

AGREE'ABLE, Adj. [agreeable, Fr.] ſuitable; conformable to, or conſiſtent with. Pleaſing; grateful; as ſuitable to our inclinations, or faculties.

AGREE'ABLENESS, S. [from agreeable and neſs, of NS, Goth. implying abſtraction, or a quality conſidered in the abſtract] the quality which renders a thing grateful to the taſte. The quality which renders a thing pleaſing, implying a calm and laſting ſatisfaction, below rapture, and leſs than admiration. Likeneſs; affinity; reſemblance.

AGREE'ABLY, Adv. [from agreeable, and ly, of lic, Sax. implying like, or manner] in a manner conſiſtent with, or conformable to. In a manner, which affords a pleaſing ſatisfaction. "So advantageouſly and agreeably." Swift.

AGREE'D, Part. [from agree] ſettled by mutual conſent.

AGREE'MENT, S. [agreement, Fr. in law Latin agreamentum, which Coke would willingly ſtretch into aggregatio mentum, an aggregation of minds] friendſhip; alliance; concord. A contract, bargain, or compact. Reſemblance; AGRE'SSES, S. [aggreſſes, Fr. bullets, from oga, Sax. terror] in Heraldry, the ſame as pellets.

AGRE'STIC, or AGRE'STICAL, Adj. [agreſtis, Lat.] ſavouring of, or belonging to the country: clowniſh; rude. Seldom uſed.

AGRES'TIS, Adj. [Lat.] wild. In Botany, applied to thoſe plants which grow in the fields, in oppoſition to thoſe that are cultivated. Likewiſe uſed to diſtinguiſh wild animals from tame.

A'GRICULTURE, S. [from agri the gen. of ager, Lat. a field, and cultúra, Lat. tillage, from cólo, Lat. to till] the art of tilling and manuring the ground, ſo as to make it fruitful and bear plants; conſiſting in manuring, fallowing, ſowing, harrowing, reaping, mowing, &c. the management of the productions of different ſoils, and planting; together with the culture of foreſts, timber, &c. The higheſt encomium that could be given a man in Rome, was, that he cultivated his own ſpot of ground well; the moſt illuſtrious ſenators applied themſelves to it, and their dictators were taken from the plough. Agriculture, or huſbandry, is the original ſource of moſt of our treaſures, and the great fountain of all materials for commerce.

AGRIFO'LIUM, S. [Lat. from αγριος Gr. rough, and φυλλον, a leaf] in Botany, the holly tree. Miller reckons thirty-three ſpecies of it; but, as the plant itſelf is very well known, and it has no medical virtues, we ſhall ſay no more.

AGROU'ND, Adv. [from a and ground, implying on ground] a marine term, ſtranded; ſtuck faſt upon ſhore, ſo as not to be got off, and purſue a voyage; hindred by the ground from paſſing further. Figuratively, meeting with ſome impediment or obſtacle, which renders it impoſſible to advance in, or go on with, an affair. "The negociators were aground at "that objection." Johnſ. Dict.

A'GUE, S. [from aigu, Fr. acute, on account of the acuteneſs and violence of the pain it occaſions during the fit; though, as Skinner obſerves, with reſpect to the duration, it is more properly named chronicle] a periodical ſpecies of fever, beginning with a cold ſhivering, which is ſucceeded by heat, and terminates in a ſweat. When the cold fit is ſcarcely perceptible, and there is a return of the hot one only, it is called an intermitting fever. According to the returns of the fit, it is differently denominated. If it returns every day, it is then called a quotidian; tidian; if every third day, a tertian; and if every fourth day, a quartan.

A'GUED, Part. [from ague] ſtruck, or affected with an ague; figuratively, cold, ſhivering, trembling, in alluſion to the effects of this diſorder. "With flight and agued fear." Shakeſp. Coriol.

A'GUE-FIT, S. [from ague and fit] the cold, chivering, trembling fit, which affects people in the ague; uſed figuratively, "The "ague-fit of fear is overblown." Shakeſp. Rich. II.

To AGUI'SE, V. A. [from guiſe, Fr. guiſa, Ital. guiſe, Belg. a form, faſhion, or particular cut of a garment] to dreſs, adorn, embelliſh, or ſet off with external ornaments. "Sometimes her head ſhe fondly would aguiſe." Fairy Q.

A'GUISH, Adj. [from ague and iſh, of iſc, Sax. iſks, or iſk, Goth. which, being added to a ſubſtantive, imports likeneſs] like, or having the properties of, an ague. "Her aguiſh love "now glows and burns." Glanv.

A'GUISHNESS, S. [from aguiſh and neſs of NS, Goth. implying quality] the quality which reſembles an ague.

AH! an Interject. [ach. Teut.] a word made uſe of to denote ſome ſudden diſlike, and occaſioned by the apprehenſion of evil conſequences. "Ah! ſinful nation." Iſaiah i. 4. Sometimes grief, and an appeal to the paſſion of pity and compaſſion "Ah me!"

AHA', an interjection denoting the triumph of contempt; intended to expreſs joy at the calamities of others, and to increaſe the uneaſineſs which they themſelves experience. "They ſaid, aha! our eye hath ſeen it." Pſal. xxxv. 21. With contempt.

A'HAB, S. [אחאב Achab, Heb. the father's brother, from אח achab, a brother, and אב abab; a father] the ſon of Omri, whom he ſucceeded in the kingdom of Iſrael. He is repreſented in ſacred writ as one of the moſt wicked kings that ever reigned over the Iſraelites: he married Jezebel, the daughter of Ethbaal, king of the Zidonians; abandoned himſelf entirely to her councils, which were dictated by pride, and enforced by cruelty.

AHEA'D, Adv. [from a and head of hœd, Iſl. height] a ſea term; beyond; implying a greater degree of ſwiftneſs. "And now the "ſpeedy dolphin gets ahead." Dryd. Applied to perſons, to contract an inveterate habit, which is not to be eaſily ſurmounted by advice, or inſtruction. "They ſuffer them at "firſt to run ahead; and when perverſe inclinations are advanced into habits, there is no "dealing with them." L'Eſtrange.

AHEI'GHT, Adv. [from a and height] on high; a great diſtance above us. "Look up aheight." Shakeſp. K. Lear.

AHI'TOPHEL, or ACHI'TOPHEL, S. [אחיתפל Achitophel, Heb. the brother of ruin; or the brother of defect, from אחה achah a brother, and נבל naphel, defect; or the brother of ſtupidity, from אח achah, a brother תפל tiphel, ſomething ſtupid.] One of the counſellors, perhaps prime-miniſter, of king David; who, on the revolt of his ſon, left him and ſided with Abſalom; tho' a perſon of great abilities, he is repreſented as giving the latter very weak counſel, and finding his opinion rejected, went home and hanged himſelf.

A'JALON, S. [אילון, Heb. an oak; ſtrength, or a ſtag, from איל aiel, Heb.] the name of a valley, famous for a battle of the Iſraelites with the allied nations, after the taking of Jericho, during which, the ſun is, by the ſacred writer, aſſerted to have ſtood ſtill in, or over this valley, by Joſhua's command.

To AID, V. A. [from aider, Fr.] to give aſſiſtance or ſuccour to; to deliver a perſon in danger, or diſtreſs, out of it, by giving him all the aſſiſtance, help, or ſuccour in one's power. To ſupport, when applied to the means uſed to free a perſon from want.

AID, S. [from aide, Fr. aita or aiute, Ital. of adjuto, Lat. to help] that which contributes to render a thing more eaſy. Aſſiſtance. Support given to a perſon. An aſſiſtant, or perſon, who, by co-operating with another, either by advice, or exertion of bodily ſtrength, renders difficulties ſurmountable, diſtreſs more tollerable, and proſperity more tranſporting. In Politics, a ſubſidy, or money given to ſupport the neceſſities of the ſtate.

AID-DE-CA'MP, S. in the army, an officer, who receives and carries the orders of a general officer to the reſt of the camp. Aid-Major, or adjutant; one who aſſiſts the major when preſent, and performs his office when he is abſent.

AI'DANCE, S. [from aid] aſſiſtance. "For aidance 'gainſt the enemy." Shakeſp. Hen VI.

AI'DER, S. [from aid] one who aſſiſts, or helps; one who takes part with a perſon, and endeavours to promote his undertaking. "The "adherents and aiders of the late rebellion." Bac. Hen. VII.

AI'DLESS, Adj. [of aid and leſs, a negative ending, from leaſe or leas, Sax. laus, Goth. pronounced loſs and laiſe, Cimbric, denoting a privation, loſs, or denial of the ſenſe of the ſubſtantive to which it is ſubjoined] deprived or in want of help or aſſiſtance to render an undertaking ſucceſsful, or a misfortune ſupportable. Without aid; or aſſiſtance from another. "Aidleſs came off." Shakeſp. Coriol.

AI'GUILLON, S. a ſmall town of Guienne in France, famous for the moſt remarkable ſiege that ever was recorded. In the year 1346, being then in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh, the duke of Normandy ſat down before it with one hundred thouſand men; yet though battered with eight of the greateſt engines that France could produce, and attacked by the beſiegers three times every day, it ſuſtained a ſiege of fourteen months, which was raiſed by the battle of Creſſy. See Dr. Smollet's Hiſtory of England.

AI'GULETS, S. [aigulet, Fr.] tags; or gold tags at the end of fringes.

To AIL, V. A. [from egle, Sax. to grieve, or be uneaſy] to diſturb; to affect with a diſagreeable ſenſation; to make uneaſy; beautifully applied to inanimate things. "What ailed thee, O ſea, that thou fleddeſt? Pſal. cxiv. 5.

AIL'MENT, S. [from ail] indiſpoſition; diſorder; diminution of health.

To AIM, V. A. to put a weapon in ſuch a direction or poſition, as to hit any object; to throw a thing at an object, in ſuch a manner, as to render the ſtriking of it poſſible. "Aims "his airy ſpear." Dryd. To endeavour to ſtrike. Figuratively, to direct the edge of ſatyr againſt a particular perſon. "At him, or him, "I take no aim." Gay.

AIM, S. the poſition or direction of a weapon, in order to ſtrike an object. The point which is intended to be hit; or the object deſigned to be ſtruck. Figuratively, an endeavour to obtain any thing, intention; purpoſe; or deſign.

AI'NSWORTH [HENRY] an eminent non-conformiſt miniſter, who flouriſhed the latter end of the ſixteenth and beginning of the ſeventeenth century. Moreri goes ſo far as to ſay, that the learned Lightfoot is not a little indebted to him; and his works were received with reſpect, even by his adverſaries; inſomuch, that it is not eaſy to produce any one oftener quoted by the learned of all countries, than Dr. Ainſworth.

AIR, S. [from air, Fr. aer, Lat. ανε, Gr. or אויר Heb.] that thin fluid body which ſurrounds our globe, forms the atmoſphere, and is the cauſe of breathing. A portion of the element which encompaſſes us, conſidered as put into motion. In a figurative ſenſe, a diſcovery made of a thing not known before. "Still "you lov'd; you gave it air before me." Dryd. Poſture, attitude, mien, manner of behaviour. "Her graceful innocence her every "air." Par. Loſt. "He gave himſelf airs." An affected, or laboured, and aukward manner of addreſs or behaviour. In Philoſophy, that thin dilatable and compreſſible fluid, in which we breath, and which ſurrounds the globe to a great height, though ſcarcely perceptible to our ſenſes, yet of ſo great neceſſity to our exiſtence, that the lamp of life would be extinguiſhed, were we deprived of its benefit. If we examine the volume of creation, we ſhall find it the grand inſtrument of the Deity in moſt of his operations, and that it is united or included in almoſt all the ſubſtances which fall within our notice. It is this which puts every thing into motion, it lends activity to fire, growth to vegetables, improvement to chymiſtry, fluidity to water, health to animals; in a word, there is ſcarce any operation in nature, which happens without its aſſiſtance; there is no production of art, which can diſclaim its neceſſarineſs. Air, in Muſic, a compoſition, which is played alone, without either baſs or any other part to accompany it; or the melody and inflexion of a muſical compoſition. Thus we ſay Handle's airs, &c. Airs in horſemanſhip, the artificial, or practiſed motions of a managed horſe, ſuch as the demi air, demi volt, curvet, &c.

To AIR, V. A. [ſee Air, S.] to expoſe to the air. To enjoy the benefit from the air. To expoſe to the fire, in order to free from the inconveniences of damp and ſtagnating air. "Air "the robes." Hooker.

AI'R-BLADDER, S. [from air and bladder] a bladder, found among the entrails of fiſh, which ſerves, by its contraction or dilatation, to enable them to riſe, or dive in the water.

AI'R-BUILT, Adj. [from air and built] built in the air; chimerical, without any ſolid foundation. "The air-built caſtle and the "golden dream." Dunciad.

AI'R-DRAWN, Adj. [from air and drawn] formed by a condenſation of the air, that which has no exiſtence in nature; chimerical; imaginary. "The air-drawn dagger." Macbeth.

AI'RER, S. [from air and er, implying an agent, from wair, Goth. and weer, Sax. a man] he that expoſes a thing to the air.

AI'R-GUN, S. [from air and gun] an inſtrument invented to ſhoot with, purely by means of compreſſed air. It is compoſed of braſs, and has two barrels, one of which is large; but the inward one, from whence the bullets are ejected, is ſmall. The magazine air-gun was invented by the ingenious L. Colloé. By this contrivance ten bullets are lodged ſo near to the place of diſcharge, that they may be drawn into the ſhooting barrel, and diſcharged ſucceſſively.

AIRI'NG, S. [from air] a ſhort walk or ride abroad; ſo called, becauſe we then enjoy the freſh and open air.

AI'R-HOLE, S. a hole made to admit, or let out, the air; a vent; or vent-hole.

AI'RINESS, S. [from airy and neſs of NS, Goth. implying quality] applied to ſituation, expoſed to a free current of air, in oppoſition to confined; openeſs: Figuratively, applied to a perſon's manner, or behaviour; levity, gaiety.

AI'RLESS, Adj. [of air and leſs, from leas or leaſe, Sax. laus, pronounced loſs, Goth. or leiſe Cim. implying negation or privation] that which has not a free current of air; that which has no communication with the external air. "Airleſs dungeon." Shakeſp. Jul. Cæſ.

AI'RLINGS, [from air, ſignifying gaiety, and ling a diminutive termination among the Saxons] a youthful, light, gay, and thoughtleſs perſon. "Slight airlings." Johnſon's Catil.

AI'R-PUMP, S. [from air and pump, of pumpe, Dan. pompe, Belg. from pompen, Belg. to draw water] in Philoſophy, an inſtrument, or machine uſed for extracting air, conſiſting of a receiver made of glaſs, wherein the objects are placed; two braſs cylinders or piſtons to extract the air with; a gage to determine the rarefaction of the air during any experiment; a tube called the Swan's Neck communicating with the receiver and the piſtons; and a winch that gives motion to the whole. It is by means of theſe inſtruments that we demonſtrate a vacuum, the gravity, and elaſticity; the utility, and univerſal diſſemination of air throughout all bodies; the cauſe of the aſcent of water in pipes, and the ſuſpenſion of mercury in tubes, and the neceſſity of this fluid for the ſupport of life; the ill conſequences of its ſtagnation.

AIR-SHAFT, S. [from air and ſhaft, of ſchaft or ſchacht, Belg. a branch, ramification, or cavity, from ſchaffen, Belg. to work, or σκαπτω, Gr. to dig] in Mining, a paſſage made for the air by digging. To conceive a true idea of its nature, the reader is referred to the deſcription of them in the Royal Magazine for September, 1759. "By the ſinking of an air-ſhaft the air hath liberty to circulate." Ray.

A'IRIE, S. [of aërius, Lat. in alluſion to the loftineſs of its ſituation, or aire, Fr. from ey, Teut. and Belg. an egg] See Aery.

AI'RY, Adj. [from aërius, Lat.] the ſubtile parts of bodies. On high, or in that ſpace of the ſyſtem above the earth aſſigned to the air. "Wondering at their height through "airy channels flow." Addiſon. Figuratively, chimerical, wanting ſolidity, or foundation. "I hold ambition of ſo airy, and light a "quality, that it is but a ſhadow's ſhadow." Shakeſp. Hamlet. Applied to dreſs, that which expoſes to the weather, in oppoſition to warm, cloſe, or confined. Applied to temper, or behaviour, gay, ſprightly, full of vivacity. Airy triplicity, in Aſtrology, are the three ſigns, Gemini, Libra, and Aquarius.

AI'SLE, S. [pronounced iſle, from aile, Fr. a wing, of ala, Lat.] the ſide walks or paths of a church, running parallel to the greater in the center, called the nef; repreſenting, in that reſpect, the wings of a building erected on each ſide the center. "The "church is one huge nef with a double aiſle "to it." Addiſon.

AISTHETE'RIUM, S. [αισθητηριον, Gr. from αισθανομαι, Gr. to perceive] in Philoſophy, the ſenſorium, or the place wherein the ſoul is imagined to reſide, and receive the notices of external objects by means of the organs of ſenſation.

A'JUTAGE, S. [ajuter, Fr. to help] in Hydraulics, the ſpout fitted to an artificial fountain, through which the water aſcends.

To AKE, V. N. [from ace, Sax. of αχος, Gr. pain] to feel a dull and continual pain, in oppoſition to ſmart, which is an acute one, and of a ſhort continuance. "His limbs muſt "ake with daily toils oppreſt." Prior.

AKI'N, Adv. [from a and kin, of kyn, Iſl. cynne, Sax. kun, Goth. relation, or likeneſs] related by blood or deſcent. Figuratively, reſembling; having the ſame properties; having a near relation to.

A'LA, S. [Lat. a wing] in Botany, the hollow of a ſtalk, which the leaf, or its pedicle, makes with the ſtalk or branches; or that hollow between the branch and leaf, from whence new ſhoots ariſe.

ALABA'STER, S. [from αλαβαστρον, Gr.] a kind of ſtone, ſofter than marble, but harder than plaiſter of Paris. It is of different colours, the ſhining or white is the moſt common; the horn and tranſparent not much valued; and that of the colour of honey, ſpotted with points or veins, which is the moſt valued.

ALABA'STER, Adj. [See Alabaſter] ſomething made of alabaſter. "Part of an ala-"baſter column." Addiſon.

ALA'CK, Interj. [were it not that moſt of the interjections are the genuine efforts of nature on ſome ſudden affection, this might be derived from ael, and ace, Sax. i. e. perfect pain, or grief, ael, in compoſition, ſignifying fullneſs] it implies ſorrow, or ſomething which cauſes it.

"Nay, what's incredible, alack!

"I ſcarce can hear a woman's clack." Swift.

ALA'CK-A-DAY, Interj. [from alack and a day. See Alack] a ſudden cry on feeling preſent, or ſeeing approaching calamity; and ſignifies that the perſon labours under the burthen of miſery.

ALA'CRIOUSLY, [from alacrious, a corrupt pronunciation of alacris, Lat.] with great chearfulneſs.

ALA'CRITY, S. [alacritas, Lat.] a chearful activeneſs.

ALAMI'RE, S. [a cant word] in Muſic, the loweſt note but one in the ſcale of muſic, invented by Guido Aretine.

A-LA-MO'DE, Adv. [according to the faſhion] a French phraſe, uſed to imply, that a thing is in the reigning taſte, or faſhion.

A-LA-MO'DE, S. [Fr.] a thin, light, gloſſy, black ſilk, not quilted or croſſed, chiefly uſed for women's bonnets, hats, or hoods at funerals, and for men's hatbands and ſcarfs on the like occaſions.

ALA'ND, Adv. [from a and land] on land, on ſhore; on dry ground, in oppoſition to the waters of the river, or ſea.

ALA'RIS, or ALIFO'RMIS, S. [Lat. in the ſhape of a wing, from ala, a wing, and forma, Lat. a ſhape] in Anatomy, the innermoſt of the three veins oppoſite the elbow.

ALA'RM, S. [from all, Ital. to, and arme, Ital. arms] a military ſignal, either by beat of drum or ſound of trumpet, by which men are now called to arms, but before the invention of thoſe inſtruments, it was done by a loud cry or ſhout. It generally includes in it an idea of approaching or ſudden danger. "When "you go to war, then ye ſhall blow an alarm." Numb. x. 9. Figuratively, the notice, ſignifying the approach of any ſudden danger. Tumult, or diſturbance, cauſing fear, or apprehenſion of danger.

To ALA'RM, V. A. [See Alarm S.] to give an army the ſignal of arming, or preparing themſelves to encounter any ſudden danger. In a ſecondary ſenſe, to cauſe fear, or apprehenſion of ſome approaching miſchief.

ALA'RMING, Part. [from alarm] that which occaſions terror, fear, or apprehenſion from the idea of approaching danger.

ALA'RM-POST, S. [from alarm and poſt] the place appointed for the ſeveral companies of an army to repair to, in caſe of any ſudden and unforeſeen danger, which occaſions an alarm to be beat, or ſounded.

ALA'RUM, S. [a corruption of alarm] this ſeems to have been the general method of ſpelling in former times. "Our ſtern alarums "chang'd to merry-meetings." Shakeſp. Rich. III. Likewiſe, a clock, calculated to give notice to a perſon of any particular time it is ſet to; by the running down of its weight, which is attended in its deſcent by a continual ſtriking of its hammer on the bell.

To ALA'RUM, S. [ſee alarum] to give notice of an approaching enemy.

ALA'S! Interject. [hélas, Fr. eylaes, Belg. abilaſſo, Ital.] when uſed of ourſelves, it implies lamentation, occaſioned by the idea of ſome calamity. "Alas! how little from the "grave we claim!" Pope. When applied to others, it implies pity, cauſed from an idea of their diſtreſs. "Alas! poor Protheus!" Shakeſp.

ALA'TE Adv. [from a and late] a ſpace of time not long paſt; lately.

ALATE'RNUS, S. [called ελαιοπρινος, Gr. from ελαια, Gr. an olive, and πρινος, Gr. an ilex or oak] in Botany, the ever-green privet.

ALATERNOE'IDES, S. [from alaternus and ειδος, Gr. a ſhape] in Botany, a plant reſembling the alaternus.

ALA'TI-PROCE'SSUS, S. [Lat. winged prominences or protuberances] in Anatomy, the proceſſes of the os ſphenoides.

ALA'Y, S. [in Hunting] the adding freſh dogs into the cry.

ALB, S. [from album, Lat. white] a veſt or garment of white linen, reaching down to the feet, worn by prieſts; a ſurplice.

A'LBAN, St. ſuppoſed to have been the firſt Chriſtian who ſuffered martyrdom in this iſland. He was born at Verulam, of pagan parents, and flouriſhed towards the end of the third century. He ſerved ſeven years as a ſoldier, under the emperor Diocleſian; but, being converted to Chriſtianity, was put to death in 303. The ſtory of his martyrdom, as related by Bede, is as follows: A party of ſoldiers being ſent to apprehend a Chriſtian whom he entertained, inſtead of delivering up his gueſt, Alban put on his habit, and delivered himſelf to the ſoldiers in his ſtead. The noble fortitude he diſplayed, and the undaunted confeſſion he made before the magiſtrate of his being a Chriſtian, ſo enraged him, that he ordered him to be beheaded immediately. The behaviour of this great perſonage at his death, and the miraculous circumſtances which attended it, are ſaid to have converted many of the ſpectators. The noble inſtance of friendſhip given by this ſaint, calls for our imitation, while it engages our wonder.

A'LBANS, St. S. a town in the hundred of Caſhio, which aroſe out of the ruins of Verulam, and receives its name from St. Alban, who was born at the laſt mentioned place, and ſuffered martyrdom, in the perſecution under Diocleſian. King Edward I. erected a croſs here in memory of Eleanor his queen, and Edward VI. incorporated it. In the church, are the monuments of K. Offa, St. Alban, and Humphry, called the good duke of Glouceſter. Near it were fought two bloody battles, one between the houſes of York and Lancaſter, in 1453, and the ſecond between the ſame, when the houſe of Lancaſter gained the victory, under the auſpices of queen Margaret. At Holloway-houſe, is a noble ſtatue of the late queen Anne, cut in black marble, at the expence of Sarah, the relict of the great duke of Marlborough, on the pedeſtal of which is a very animated character of her majeſty, both in public and private life; with this remarkable concluſion, All this I know to be true, Sarah Marlborough. St. Alban's ſends two members to parliament, gives the title of duke to the family of Beauclercs; is governed by a mayor, high ſteward, recorder, twelve aldermen, a town clerk, and twenty-four aſſiſtants; has a weekly market for cattle and ſheep, one of the greateſt in England for wheat; and three fairs for horſes, cows, and ſheep, viz. on March 25, June 17, and September 29. It is in Hertfordſhire, about twenty miles from London.

A'LBANY, S. [ſuppoſed to have taken its name from Albanact] called by the Scots, its inhabitants, Braid Albin, or the higheſt part of Scotland, is ſituated beyond the Grampian mountains. The inhabitants are Highlanders, a warlike, active, and hardy race of people; who are never intimidated by dangers, nor daunted at difficulties; the ſword and target are their proper arms, and when charging with theſe they have performed exploits, which, if particularized, might ſeem romantic. The French have always admired and lamented their bravery in all encounters; but the noble light they appeared in, at the attack of the French army near Quebeck, will always ſhine grateful to the mind of an Engliſhman, while the death of general Wolfe is lamented, or the importance of the place, which he took, with his dying breath, is underſtood. Likewiſe, a place in North America, ſituated on Hudſon's river, 150 miles north of New-York, called Orange Fort by the Dutch.

A'LBE, S. a ſmall piece of money in Germany, worth eight ſenins, or two creukers of that country; or one ſol ſeven deniers French.

ALBE'IT, Adv. [from al for although, it and be] uſed to infer ſomething, though we ſhould admit of the poſition of an adverſary; although; notwithſtanding; granting.

ALBE'RNUS, S. a kind of camblet, or rather baraccan, which comes from the Levant.

ALBUGI'NEA, Adj. [Lat. from albus, white] in Anatomy, the outermoſt coat of the eye, which compoſes the white, called adnata and conjunctiva. Likewiſe, the membrane immediately covering the teſticles.

ALBUGI'NEOUS, Adj. [albúgo, Lat. the white white of an egg] ſomething belonging to that part of an egg which is called its white; or ſomething which reſembles it. "Eggs will "freeze in the albugineous part." Brown.

ALBU'GO, S. [Lat. from albus, white] in Anatomy, the white of the eye. Likewiſe, a diſorder of the eye, whereby the horny tunic loſes its tranſparency, and becomes opake.

ALBUM-GRÆ'CUM, [in Pharmacy] dog's white dung; uſed with honey as a plaiſter, to deterge and cleanſe inflammations in the throat.

ALBU'MEN OVI, S. [Lat.] the white of an egg, uſed in medicine on account of its glutinous or binding nature, mixed with bole armoniac.

A'LBUS, S. a ſmall coin, current in Cologne, &c. four of which make one blaſſart.

ALCAHE'ST, S. [Arab.] in Chymiſtry, an univerſal diſſolvent; a menſtruum capable of diſſolving any body put into it.

ALCA'IC, Adj. [from Alcæus, the inventor] in ancient Poetry, a name appropriated to ſeveral ſorts of verſes, the firſt conſiſting of five feet, of which the firſt is either a ſpondee, or iambic; the ſecond, an iambic; the third, a long ſyllable; the fourth, a dactyl; and the fifth, a dactyl or amphimacer: as, omnes eodem cogimur omnium. The ſecond ſpecies conſiſts of two dactyls and two troches, as, exilu impoſi tura cymbæ. Examples of each of theſe ſorts may be met with in Horace, who not only introduced this ſpecies of poetry into Rome, but transfuſed the ſpirit of Alcæus likewiſe into all his imitations.

ALCA'ID, S. [from אל al, an Arab. particle, equal to the in Engliſh, and קאד kad or akad, Arab. to govern or rule] among the Moors in Barbary, the governor of a city or caſtle, who has a ſovereign juriſdiction in civil and criminal cauſes. "Th' alcaid ſhuns me." Dryd.

ALCA'LDE, S. [ſee Alcaid, from whence it is borrowed] a judge, or miniſter of juſtice, reſembling a provoſt among the French.

A'LCALI, or A'LCALY. See Alkaly.

ALCALIZA'TION, S. See Alkalization.

ALCA'NNA, S. [Arab. קנה knab] a drug uſed in dying, which comes from the Levant. In powder it is green, but the tincture it makes differs according to the difference of the liquor in which it is ſteeped; when ſoaked in water, it is yellow; but when in vinegar, citron juice, or allum-water, it is red. The oil extracted from the berries is of an agreeable ſcent, and of uſe for ſoftening the nerves.

ALCA'NALA, S. [Span.] a cuſtom-houſe duty of five per cent. paid on the import of merchandizes in Spain and Spaniſh America.

A'LCHYMICAL, Adj. [from alchymy] according to the proceſs, or method made uſe of by alchymiſts.

A'LCHYMIST, S. [from alchymy] one who profeſſes or purſues the ſcience of alchymy. "Plays the alchymiſt." Shakeſp. K. John.

A'LCHYMY, S. [of al and kemia, Egypt. or χημια, Gr,] a part of chemiſtry employed in curious and myſterious reſearches; its chief objects have been, firſt, The making of gold. Secondly, An univerſal medicine, or one to cure all diſeaſes. Thirdly, An univerſal diſſolvent. And, fourthly, An univerſal ferment; or a ſubſtance, which, being applied to any ſeed, will increaſe its fecundity to infinity.

ALCMA'NIAN, Adj. [from alcman] a kind of lyric verſe, ſo called from the inventor, conſiſting of two dactyls and two trochees.

A'LCOHOL, S. [from אל al, Arab, and קאל kaal, to attenuate, or ſubtilize] in Chemiſtry, the pureſt ſpirit of wine, rectified, by frequent diſtillations, to its utmoſt ſubtility. Likewiſe, a very fine impalpable powder.

ALCOHOLIZA'TION, S. [from alcohol] the act of rectifying ſpirits; or of reducing bodies to an impalpable powder.

To ALCOHOLI'ZE, V. A. [from alcohol] to make an alcohol; or to rectify ſpirits by frequent diſtillation, ſo, that when ſet on fire, they ſhall conſume away, without leaving any moiſture or dregs behind them.

A'LCORAN, S. [from אל al, Arab. and קרן koiran, Arab. to collect, or read] the book of the Mohammedan law, compoſed by Mahomet, with the aſſiſtance of Batiras, a Jacobin, Sergius, a Neſtorian monk, and ſome Jews: it is divided into four parts, called by the name of ſome animal, as the Cow, the Emmet, the Spider, and the Fly. Though wrote by a perſon of no learning, it is by the Mohammedans extolled for the elegance of its ſtile, and, on that account, urged to have been a divine compoſition. It abounds not only in abſurdities but contradictions, which laſt they vindicate, by ſaying, that it was three and twenty years in compoſing; and that the circumſtances of things altering in that interval, the Deity himſelf repealed and altered ſeveral precepts, to ſuit them with the nature of things. It was originally in looſe ſheets, which Mahomet reported he received ſingly from God. This book is held in ſuch veneration by its profeſſors, that it is death for a Chriſtian or a Jew to touch it; and equally fatal to a Muſſelman himſelf, if he handles it with unwaſhen hands. Let the irreverent Chriſtian bluſh at this, when he pays ſo little regard to the ſacred oracles of God, included in the Old and New Teſtament; and never dare to turn its precious leaves, without having firſt waſhed his hands in innocency.

ALCO'VE, S. [alcobat, Span. of elcauf, Arab. a cabinet, or ſleeping place; or elcobat, Arab. a tent] a receſs, or part of a chamber, ſeparated by an eſtrade, or partition of columns, in which is placed a bed of ſtate, or ſeats to entertain company. "Deep in a rich alcove "the prince was laid." Pope.

A'LCYON. See Halcyon.

ALDBO'ROUGH, S. [of ald, the name of a river, and burig, Sax. a town] a populous town in Suffolk, near the river All or Ald, from whence it derives its name. It had two ſtreets, one of which has lately been ſwallowed up by the encroachments of the ſea. Having a convenient harbour for ſeamen and fiſhermen, it is moſtly inhabited by people of that ſort. It is a town corporate, governed by two bailiffs, ten capital burgeſſes, twenty-four inferior officers, and ſends two members to parliament. It has a market weekly on Saturday; a fair annually on the 26th of April; beſides two others for toys, 1ſt of March and 3d of May. It lies eighty-eight miles N. E. of London. Lat. 51 deg. 21 min. N. Long, 1 deg. 38 min. E.

A'LDBURGH, or ALDBO'ROUGH, S. [from æld, Sax. old, and burig, Sax. a town] a borough town in the North Riding of Yorkſhire, nigh which the Iſurum Brigantum, near Eure, from whence its firſt name is derived, formerly ſtood. It ſends two members to parliament, and is 156 miles N. of London.

A'LDEBARAN, S. [Perſ.] in Aſtronomy, a ſtar of the firſt magnitude in the eye of the conſtellation Taurus, or the Bull, and from thence named the Bull's Eye. Long. 50 deg. 49 min. 50 ſec of Gemini. Lat. 5 deg. 27 min. 30 ſec. S. according to Flamſtead.

A'LDER, S. [from aelder, Sax. beſt or chief] a tree with leaves reſembling thoſe of the hazel. The trees are produced either by layers or truncheons, about three feet in length, in February or March.

ALDERLI'EVEST, Adj. Superl. [from æeld, Sax. poſitive or compar. and lieveſt, ſuperlative, moſt dear, or beloved] moſt beloved; that which is preferred to another, or has held the longeſt poſſeſſion of the heart. "With "you mine alderlieveſt ſovereign." Shakeſp. Henry VI.

A'LDERMAN, E. [from ælderman, Sax. of ældor, comparatively of æld, Sax. and man] in its original ſignification it implied a perſon, who, on account of his years and experience, was proper to preſide over the affairs of a nation, and to aſſiſt a prince with his counſel; in this reſpect it ſignified the ſame as a privy-counſellor, or parliament man. But this will appear more plain, if we recollect, that the three ſtates of the kingdom were divided into Atheling, which included the nobility; Alderman the ſecond rank; and Thane, the laſt: till Athelſtan's time, the term was uſed for an earl or count, and after his reign were ſubſtituted inſtead of it. In the time of Edgar it implied a judge, or juſtice. But the term is now appropriated to the twenty-ſix perſons, who preſide over the twenty-ſix wards, into which the city of London is divided; out of which the lord-mayor is general choſen by rotation. They are all them qualified to act as juſtices of the peace at preſent, though formerly, only ſuch aldermen as had been lord-mayors, and the three eldeſt, or next to the chair, were inveſted with that honour. But they have not only the management of the civil, but likewiſe the military government of the city, are officers in its militia, and members of the artillery-company. Aldermen preſide in other cities beſides London.

A'LE, S. [eala, eale, or ealath, Sax. eala, Run. Dan. ell, Iſl. eli, Brit. oil] a liquor, the common drink of the Engliſh; made of an infuſion of malt and hops in boiling water; afterwards fermented with yeaſt or barm; it is diſtinguiſhable from beer in reſpect of its ſtrength, and age; owing to its having a leſs quantity of hops and malt than beer has, in proportion to the ſame quantity of water.

A'LE, (GILL) S. [from gill, Sax. ground-ivy, and ale] a liquor made of ground-ivy leaves, ſteeped in ale.

AL'E-CONNER, S. [from ale and con, of connan, Sax. to know, or kunden, Teut. to ſhow] an officer of the city of London, whoſe buſineſs is to inſpect the meaſures of the public-houſes.

A'LE-CO'ST, S. [from ale and coſtus, a fragrant herb in Botany, the balſamita or corymbifera major; it derives its name from the agreeable taſte and fragrant ſcent it affords, when ſteeped in ale.

A'LEGAR, S. [from ale and eager of æger, Run. and Dan. or egr. Brit. aigre, Fr. ſour] throughout all the county of Lincoln the term given to ſour ale; by Londoners ſtiled, with great impropriety, ale-vinegar.

A'LEHOOF, S. [ſtom ale and hof, Sax. ground-ivy] in Botany, the ground-ivy, ſo called by the Saxons, becauſe a chief ingredient in their malt liquors, inſtead of hops.

A'LE-HOUSE, S. [ealhuſe, Sax. from eale, Sax. ale and huſe, a houſe] a houſe where ale is ſold. Diſtinguiſhed from a tavern, becauſe that is appropriated to wine.

ALE'MBEC, S. [from alombic, Arab. the upper part of a diſtilling veſſel] in Diſtillery, originally the upper part or head of a ſtill into which the vapours aſcend; and, being there condenſed by the external air, flow out in drops, or ſtream like a thread, through an aperture with a long neck.

A'LE'NGTH, Adj. from a and length] at full length; along; ſtretched upon the ground.

ALE'PPO, S. called by the natives habb, the metropolis of Syria; for buildings ſecond to none in the Turkiſh empire: it is ſituated on an eminence, and, together with the ſuburbs, occupies eight ſmall hills. Over the doors and windows, within the houſes inhabited by the Turks, are written paſſages of the Kôran; but, in thoſe of the Chriſtians, texts of Scripture. The moſques are very numerous, ſome of which are very magnificent; before each is a ſquare area, in the center of which is a fountain, intended for the ablutions before prayers. The number of inhabitants in the city and ſuburbs is computed at about 235,000, of which 200,000 are Turks, 30,000 Chriſtians, and 5000 Jews; the majority of the Chriſtians are Greeks or Armenians; beſides which they are divided into Maronites and Syrians. The language generally ſpoken is vulgar Arabic. The Turks of diſtinction uſe the Turkiſh;

Turkiſh; moſt of the Armenians, the Armenian; ſome of the Syrians underſtand Syriac; many of the Jews, the Hebrew; but ſcarce one of the Greeks, a word of Greek, whether it be ancient or modern. Lat. near 36 deg. 12 min. N. Long. 37 deg. 40 min. E. Old Aleppo, called by the Arabians Kennaſerin, is about twelve miles from the modern, and has nothing to recommend it to notice, unleſs the leſſon its ruins give us of the inſtability of earthly things. Lat. 36 deg. 8 min. N. Long. 37 deg. 30 min. E.

ALE'RT, Adj. [alert, Fr.] watchful, active, diligent; ready on any emergence: briſk, pert, ſharp.

ALE'RTNESS, S. [from alert and neſs, of NS, a Goth. termination] the quality of being alert, ſprightly, pert, active, or vigilant. "The "alertneſs and unconcern for matters of com-"mon life." Spectator.

A'LESBURY, AY'LESBURY, or AI'LSBURY, S. [eagleſburgh, from eagles, Sax. an eagle, and burgh or burig, Sax. a town] the largeſt and beſt borough town in Buckinghamſhire, as early as the times of the Saxons, who took it by force in 571. It was chiefly famous for St. Ædith, a native of it, who is reported to have performed ſeveral miracles. In the time of William the Conqueror it was a royal manor; who gave ſeveral yard lands, on condition that the owner ſhould find litter, or ſtraw, for his bed, whenever he came that way. Let the ſons of voluptuouſneſs attend to this circumſtance; and admire the ſimplicity of former times! William of Aileſbury held it by this charter, with this addition, that he ſhould likewiſe ſtraw the king's chamber, and provide him three eels, if he came in the winter; but, if in ſummer, beſides ſtraw for the bed, he was to provide two green geeſe. This he was to repeat three times a year, if the king came thither ſo often. It has given the title of earl to the noble family of the Bruces; Charles II. having conferred that title in 1664 on Robert Bruce, earl of Elgin in Scotland, deſcended from the kings of that country, to which their motto, fuimus, "we have been," ſeems ſtrongly to allude. Round this town is a very famous vale for breeding and fattening ſheep, for which this country is famous. The poorer ſort are generally employed in making laces for edging; which, though they may not equal, yet hinder, in a great meaſure, the importation of that commodity from France, and it were to be hoped, that by due encouragement from the nobility, it might be entirely ſuppreſſed. It was made a town incorporate by Q. Mary, in 1553; conſiſting of a bailiff, ten aldermen, and twelve capital burgeſſes; at preſent, its chief officer is termed a conſtable. Its fairs are on the Saturday before Palm Sunday, the 14th of June, and on the 25th of September, for cattle; it ſends two members to parliament, and is thirty-four computed, or forty-four meaſured miles, N. W. of London.

A'LESHAM, S. [ægleſham, Sax. from ægles an eagle, and hæem, ham, Sax. heym, Teut. a dwelling-houſe, or ſmall village] a market-town in Norfolk, very much peopled by knitters of ſtockings: its market is on Saturday; and its fairs, for lean cattle, ordinary horſes, and chapmen or pedlars wares, on the 23d of March. It lies 119 miles N. of London.

A'LE-TASTER, S. [from ale and taſter] an officer ſworn in every court-leet, to examine into the goodneſs and meaſures of ale and beer, within the juriſdiction of the leet or lordſhip.

A'LE-VAT, S. [from ale and vat, from vat, Belg. fat, fata, fæt, Sax. a veſſel] the veſſel in which ale is fermented or worked.

A'LEWA'SHED, Part. [from ale and waſh] ſteeped or ſoaked in ale; applied to immoderate drinkers of ale. "Foaming bottles and "ale-waſhed wits." Shakeſp. Hen. V.

ALEXA'NDERS, S. [from Alexandria, where it grows in great abundance, Skinner] in Botany, the Smyrnium. The flowers are produced in umbels, conſiſting of leaves placed orbicularly, and expanded in the form of a roſe.

ALEXA'NDER's-FOOT, S. [in Botany] an herb ſo called, from its roots reſembling a foot.

ALEXA'NDRINE, S. [from Alexander Paris, the inventor of this metre] a kind of verſe borrowed from the French, conſiſting among them of twelve or thirteen ſyllables in alternate couplets, and among us of twelve. They were formerly pretty much uſed by our poets to clinch their verſes, and generally were the laſt of three ending in the ſame rhyme; but are now diſcarded on account of their want of harmony, and their ſuſpending the mind too much by their extraordinary length. But both theſe defects cannot be better conceived, than by Mr. Pope's opinion of them in his Art of Criticiſm.

"A needleſs Alexandrine ends the ſong,
"ſlow length along."

ALEXIPHA'RMIC, Adj. [αλεξιφαρμακον, Gr. from αλεξω, Gr. to drive out or repel, and φαρμακον, Gr. poiſon] in its primitive ſenſe, ſomething which has the virtue of expelling poiſons taken internally; and is the ſame as an antidote. Uſed ſubſtantively, by modern practitioners, it means remedies adapted, or proper to expel that malignancy with which the animal ſpirits are affected in acute diſtempers, through the pores of the ſkin, in the form of a ſweat.

ALEXITE'RIAL, Adj. [from αλεξω, Gr. to repel] that which drives away poiſon, or expels the malignant humours attending acute diſeaſes.

ALFANDI'GA, S. [Port.] the name of the cuſtom-houſe at Liſbon, where the duties of export and import are paid.

A'LFRED, Æ'LFRID, A'LDFRID, S. [from æl, Sax. all, and frid, peace] the illegitimate ſon of Oſwi, king of Northumberland; land; who, by an invitation of the nobility, took poſſeſſion of the throne in 686. He was one who experienced the greateſt viciſſitudes of fortune with an undaunted mind; obtained ſeveral ſignal victories over the Danes; laid the firſt rudiments of our marine; divided the kingdom into ſhires; and left a ſyſtem of laws, that are at once the admiration and ſecurity of every Engliſhman; to inſtance in one particular, it is to him we owe trials by juries. As a king, there is none more glorious in the Engliſh annals. In his private life, he was the moſt worthy, induſtrious, and amiable man in his dominions.

ALEXITE'RIAL, ALEXITE'RICAL, or ALEXITE'RIC, Adj. [from ἀλεξέω, Gr. to drive away] that which repels poiſon, or the malignant humours of fevers.

A'LGETRANE, S. a kind of pitch, or bituminous matter found in the bay, formed by the cape of St. Helena, on the iſle La Plata, which iſſues out at a hole three or four paces from the high-water mark.

A'LGEBRA, S. [from al and geber, Arab. the reduction of broken numbers to whole] a branch of arithmetic, which takes the quantity ſought, as if granted; and, by means of one or more quantities given, proceeds by conſequence, till the quantity at firſt only ſuppoſed to be known, or ſome power of it, is found to be equal to ſome quantity or quantities known, and, conſequently, itſelf known likewiſe. The origin of this art is very much controverted, though, indeed, its invention is univerſally attributed to Diophantus.

ALGEBRA'IC, or ALGEBRAI'CAL, Adj. [from algebra] ſomething relative, or belonging to algebra.

ALGEBRA'ICAL CURVE, is that wherein the relation of the abſciſſi to the ſemiordinates may be determined by an algebraic equation; and is contradiſtinguiſhed to a mechanical and tranſcendental one.

ALGEBRA'IST, S. [from algebra] a perſon acquainted with, or converſant in, the operations of algebra.

A'LGENEL, S. [in Aſtronomy] a fixed ſtar of the ſecond magnitude, on the left ſide of the conſtellation, named Perſeus. Long. 27 deg. 46 min. 4 ſec. of Taurus; and lat. 30 deg. 5 min. 20 ſec. N. according to Flamſtead.

ALGI'DITY, A'LGIDNESS, [from algid] that quality which makes a thing cold.

ALGIE'RS, or AR'GIER, S. a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the E. by Tunis; on the W. by the kingdom of Fez; on the N. by the Mediterranean, and on the S. by France. From N. to S. it is 450 miles, where broadeſt; but, in other places, only 180. It is ſuppoſed to have been the Mauritania Cæſarienſis of the Romans, and is confirmed to have been ſo, from the city of Cæſarea, which was built by Juba, in honour of Auguſtus. After its conqueſt by the Arabs, it was called the kingdom of Tremean. Its climate is ſo temperate, that it enjoys a conſtant verdure all the year round. Algier, the capital of this kingdom, is ſo very populous, that the foreign merchants amount at leaſt to three thouſand families; and the Jews to no leſs than 8000: almoſt the whole trade paſſes through their hands. The greateſt commerce of the Algerines conſiſts in the goods they obtain by the piratical plunder of all Chriſtians they meet with in the Mediterranean, and that part of the ocean near them. Their marine is ſo ſtrong, that they can fit out twenty-two or twenty-three veſſels annually, with three or four hundred men each. There is not one phyſician in Algiers, nor throughout the whole kingdom; for they look upon the taking of medicines as nothing leſs than tempting God.

ALGI'FIC, Adj. [from algidus, Lat. cold, and fio, Lat. to make] that which cauſes or produces cold.

AL'GOL, S. [in Aſtronomy] Meduſa's head, a fixed ſtar of the third magnitude, in Perſeus. Long. 21 deg. 50 min. 42 ſec. of Taurus. Lat. 22 deg. 23 min. 47 ſec. N. according to Flamſtead.

ALGUA'ZIL, S. [Arab.] an officer among the Spaniards, acting under the judge.

A'LIAS, Adv. [Lat.] otherwiſe; uſed in law to ſpecify the different names by which the criminal has gone: as "Storke, alias "Young, alias Griffiths." i. e. "Storke, "otherwiſe Young, otherwiſe Griffiths."

A'LICHONS, S. the wings, or ladles of a wheel,

ALICO'NDE, S. [Æthiop.] a tree which grows in Lower Æthiopia, whoſe fruit reſembles the cocao, but is not fit to eat.

A'LIBLE, Adj. [alibilis, Lat. from álo, to nouriſh] that which nouriſhes; or that which may be nouriſhed.

A'LIEN, Adj. [aliénus, Lat.] not of the ſame kind. Inconſiſtent with; eſtranged from; at enmity with.

A'LIEN, S. [aliénus, Lat.] ſomething adverſe to, or at enmity with. "An alien to the "hearts of all the court." Shakeſp. Hamlet. A foreigner, or one of another country. Not of the ſame profeſſion, part, or ſect.

To A'LIEN, V. A. [alíener, Fr. alieno, Lat.] to transfer our own property to another. To grow averſe to; to diſlike.

A'LIENABLE, Adj. [from alien and abal, Sax. power or poſſibility] that which may be transferred to, and become the property of another. "Land is alienable." Dennis.

To A'LIENATE, V. A. [from alienátum, ſupine of aliéno, Lat.] to transfer property to another. To grow averſe to, by transferring our affections to ſome other perſon or thing.

ALIENA'TION, S. [alienátio, Lat.] the act of transferring property to another. Change of affection from approbation to diſlike.

ALI'GEROUS, Adj. [áliger, Lat. of ala, Lat.

Lat. a wing, and gero, to bear] that which has wings.

To ALI'GHT, V. N. [from alibtan, Sax. or alichten, Dutch] to deſcend from a higher ſituation to a lower. To deſcend from, or get off an horſe. "There is alighted one at your "gate." Shakeſp. Merch. of Ven. "Like "a lark continuing her ſong till ſhe alights." Spectat. To fall upon from a higher place.

ALI'KE, Adv. [from a and like] equally, or in the ſame manner. "All ſeaſons, and "their change, all pleaſe alike." Par. Loſt. Both; without difference, or diſtinction. Reſembling.

A'LIMENT, S. [aliméntum, Lat. from alo, to nouriſh] food, or that which nouriſhes, or ſatisfies the calls of hunger.

ALIME'NTA, Adj. [from aliment] that which can increaſe the dimenſions of plants or animals, by being taken in food.

ALIME'NTARINESS, S. [from alimentary and neſs, of NS, Goth.] the quality which renders a thing capable of affording nouriſhment.

ALIME'NTARY, Adj. [from aliment] that which hath relation, or belongs to aliment; that which nouriſhes, or is eaten for diet. "Of alimentary roots ſome are pulpy "and very nutritious." Arbuth.

ALIMENTA'TION, S. [from aliment] the quality, action, or power of affording nouriſhment; or the increaſing of the dimenſions of a body, by converting food into its own ſubſtance. "They have an accretion, but no "alimentation." Bac. Nat. Hiſt.

ALIMO'NIOUS, Adj. [from alimonia, Lat.] that which nouriſhes. A word ſeldom uſed.

A'LIMONY, S. [from alimónia, Lat.] in its primary ſenſe, nouriſhment; but now appropriated to the law, wherein it implies that allowance which a married woman ſues for, and is entitled to, upon any occaſional ſeparation, providing it be not for elopement or adultery.

A'LIPOW-MONTIS CETI, S. [in Botany] a kind of white turbeth, a very ſtrong purgative.

A'LIQUANT, Adj. [aliquantum, Lat.] in Arithmetic, is that part of a number which will not meaſure or divide it, without having a remainder. Or that which, being taken any number of times, will always be greater or leſs, than the number or quantity of which it is an aliquant part. Thus 2 is the aliquant part of 7; becauſe twice 2 wants 3 of 7, and 4 times 2 exceeds 7 by 1. And 7 is an aliquant part of 30, becauſe it will not divide exactly, or without leaving 2 for a remainder.

A'LIQUOT, Adj. [of aliquot, Lat.] in Arithmetic or Geometry, ſuch a part of any quantity or number, as will exactly meaſure or divide it without any thing remaining over. Thus 4 is the aliquot part of 8; 5 of 10; and 6 of 12. To find the aliquot parts of any number, divide the given number by its leaſt diviſor, and the quotient by its laſt diviſor, till you find a quotient no longer diviſible.

A'LISH, Adj. [from ale and iſh of the Saxon termination iſc, or iſk, Goth.] that which is like, or reſembles ale in ſome of its qualities. "The ſweet aliſh taſte." Mortim.

ALI'VE, Adj. [from a and live, of liban, or leofan, Sax. leben, Teut. or leven, Dutch] enjoying all the powers of action belonging to a living animal; a ſtate wherein the ſoul remains united to the body, in oppoſition to death, which is the diſſolution of that union. Chearful, ſprightly, gay, and full of ſpirits. Figuratively, without diminution, or leſſening. "The good affection of ſuch as inclined to-"ward them might be kept alive." Hooker.

ALKALE'SCENT, Part. [from alkali] that which reſembles the qualities of an alkali. "All animal diet is alkaleſcent, or an anti-"acid." Arbuth.

A'LKALI, S. [from kali, Arab. glaſſwort, which having burnt to aſhes, they boiled in water; and after evaporating, called the white ſalt remaining ſal kali, or alkali] in Medicine, by ſome writers defined to be that which will cauſe an efferveſcence when mingled with an acid; but Boerhaave explodes this definition as defective, and ſhews, that too great a dependence on it may be productive of dangerous conſequences.

ALKALI'NE, Adj. [from alkali] that which has the qualities of alkali.

To ALKA'LIZATE, V. A. [from alkali] to make bodies alkaline by chemical proceſs; or to draw out the latent alkaline virtues of a body, by reducing it to a different form.

ALKA'LIZATE, Adj. [from alkali] that which has the powers and qualities of a body which is termed an alkali by medical writers.

ALKALIZA'TION, S. [from alkalize] in Chemiſtry, the act of impregnating, or mingling, a fluid with an alkaline ſalt, either to make it a better diſſolvent, or to load the phlegm ſo that it may not riſe in diſtillation.

A'LKANET, S. [from alcanne and elhanne, Arab. alcana, corrupt Lat.] in Botany, the anchuſa, a plant of the bugloſs kind, with a red root, brought from the ſouth of France.

ALKEKE'NGE, S. [in Medicine] a fruit or berry, produced from a tree of the ſame name, the leaves of which are acid and bitter.

ALKE'RMES, S. [Arab.] in Medicine, a term borrowed from the Arabs, denoting a rich cardiac electuary, conſiſting of ſeveral warm and aromatic ingredients, of which kermes is the baſis.

A'LL, Adv. [ſee All, Adj.] entirely. "All "amaz'd the prieſt let fall the book." Shakeſp. Excluſive of any other. "To love my father "all." Shakeſp. Lear.

ALL, Adj. [al, æal, ealle, all, Sax. oll, Brit. all, alls, Goth. alle, Run. and Dutch, alle, Teut. and ὅλος, Gr.] applied to number, it ſometimes is uſed collectively for the whole, or every one of the parts without exception. "We are all one man's ſons." Gen. xlii. 2. Applied to quantity, every parcel, or every particle. Applied to time, the whole ſpace or interval. Applied to place, its whole extent. The major part, or greateſt.

ALL, S. the whole, oppoſed to a part, or nothing. "She caſt in all, even all that ſhe "had." Mark xii. 44. This word is much uſed in compoſition.

ALL-BEA'RING, Part. [from all, ſignifying perfection, and fulneſs, in alluſion to that of the Sax. æl in compoſition, and bearing] that which is fully, entirely, and perfectly fruitful; that which produces all things. "The all-bearing earth." Pope.

ALL-CHE'ARING, Part. [from æl, Sax. and cheering] that which imparts comfort and chearfulneſs to all; that which perfectly poſſeſſes the power of communicating gaiety, or ſatisfaction, to every one.

ALL-COMMA'NDING, Part. [from all of æl, entirely, and commanding] that which over-rules all; that which governs with uncontroulable ſway.

ALL-COMPOSING, Part. [from all, of æl, Sax. and compoſing] that which is indued with a power of compoſing or ending any anxiety, or diſturbance. "The bands of all-com- "poſing reſt." Pope.

ALLANTO'IS, or ALLATOEI'DES, S. [from αλλας, Gr. a gut, and ειδος, Gr. a reſemblance] a thin ſmooth membrane inveſting the fœtus; whoſe reality, though long controverted, has been eſtabliſhed by Dr. Hale and M. Littre.

To ALLA'Y, V. A. [from alloyer, Fr.] to mix one metal with another, to render it fit or proper for coinage. In this ſenſe ſome ſpell it alloy, in order to keep more cloſely to the French, from whence it is borrowed. To abate, or leſſen any quality. "No friendly offices "ſhall alter or allay that rancour." South. To quiet, pacify, or reduce a boiſterous tempeſt into a calm. "If by your art you have put the "wild waters in this roar, allay them." Shakeſp.

ALLA'Y, or ALLO'Y, S. [alloy, Fr.] in its primary ſenſe, a mixture of divers metals, or of divers parcels of the ſame metal of different fineneſs. Minters never ſtrike any gold or ſilver without allay; braſs coin is made of an allay of copper; Jewellers, Wire-drawers, and Gold-beaters, are obliged to uſe an allay in the gold they work; the Braſs-founders have their allay of copper. Allay is uſed in a ſecondary ſenſe for ſomething which leſſens, or diminiſhes the properties of the thing with which it is mixed. That which depreciates, or renders baſe, by diminution or leſſening.

ALLA'YER, S. [from allay and er, implying an agent, of wair, Goth. or wær, Sax. a man] the perſon or thing which is indued with a power of allaying, leſſening, debaſing, corrupting, or diminiſhing.

ALLAY'MENT, S. [from allay] a diminiſhing, or leſſening, applied to the paſſions.

ALL-CONQUE'RING, Part. [from all of the Sax. æll, and conquering] that which ſubdues every thing. "All-conquering death!" Par. Loſt.

ALL-CONSU'MING, Part. [of all, from æl, Sax. conſuming] that which perfectly conſumes; that which deſtroys every thing in its power. "All-conſuming care." Pope.

ALL-DEVOU'RING, Part. that which perfectly devours; that which eats up every thing. "Deſtructive war, and all-devouring "age." Pope.

ALLEGA'TION, S. [from allego, Lat.] an affirmation, declaration; including the ſecondary idea of ſomething culpable, or criminal. "To ſwear falſe allegations." Shakeſp.

To ALLE'GE, V. A. [allego] to declare, or affirm; to plead as an excuſe, to produce in defence.

ALLEGE'ABLE, Adj. [from allege and abal, Sax. implying poſſibility, or power] any thing that may be charged; any thing that may be pleaded in excuſe.

ALLE'GER, S. [from allege] he that aſſerts or declares any thing.

ALLE'GIANCE, S. [allegiance, Fr.] in Law, that natural, ſworn, or legal obedience every ſubject owes to his prince, and is an incident inſeparable, or that which follows a perſon, whereſoever he goes. Oath of allegiance is that, which is taken to the king in quality of a temporal prince, and is diſtinguiſhed from that of ſupremacy, which is taken to him in quality of ſupreme head of the church.

ALLEGO'RIC, Adj. [from allegory, wrote formerly allegorick] ſomething which muſt be underſtood figuratively, in oppoſition to literal.

ALLEGO'RICAL, Adj. [from allegory] that which conſiſts of expreſſions purely figurative, where ſomething elſe is meant, than what is expreſſed; oppoſed to literal; myſtical.

ALLEGO'RICALLY, Adv. [from allegorical and ly of lic, Sax. implying like, or manner] figuratively, in oppoſition to literally.

ALLEGO'RICALNESS, S. [from allegorical and neſs of NS, Goth.] the quality of being figurative.

To ALLE'GORIZE, V. A. [from allegory] to turn into an allegory; to turn into a myſtical ſenſe.

A'LLEGORY, S. [αλληγορια, from αλλος, Gr. another, and αγορευω, Gr. to ſpeak] a figurative ſpeech, in which ſomething elſe is contained than what the literal meaning conveys. Thus the Roman commonwealth is addreſſed by Horace under the picture of a ſhip. The Fables of Æſop, the Ilias and Odyſſes of Homer, and the Eneis of Virgil, may be included under this ſpecies of writing.

ALLE'GRO, S. [Ital. gay or ſprightly] in Muſic, one of the ſix diſtinctions of time, expreſſing the quickeſt motion, excepting preſto, as, "Allegro ma non preſto," quick, but not ſo faſt as preſto. If it be preceded by poco, it muſt be played in a ſlower or graver manner than when allegro ſtands alone; if by più, it muſt then be faſteſt of all. It will not be improper to add, that the ſix diviſions of time are, as follow; grave, adagio, largo, vivace, allegro, preſto.

ALLELU'JAH,

ALLELU'JAH, S. [a corrupt ſpelling, inſtead of halleluiah, of הללו hallelú, Heb. praiſe ye, and יה Jáh, God] a word of ſpiritual rapture, which, on account of its peculiar energy, is generally untranſlated; but ſignifies, Praiſe ye the Lord.

ALLE'MANDA, or ALLEMA'ND, S. [Ital.] in muſic, a grave air, compoſed in common time, conſiſting of two parts, or ſtrains.

ALLE'RIONS, S. [Fr.] in heraldry, eaglets, repreſented ſpread, and without beaks or feet; and differ from the martlet, becauſe that has a beak, and has its wings ſhut.

To ALLE'VIATE, V. A. [allevo, Lat.] Figuratively, to lighten, to make lighter or leſs, in alluſion to the diminiſhing the preſſure of a heavy load. To leſſen, mitigate, or diminiſh the enormity of a fault.

A'LLEY, S. [allée, Fr.] in gardening, a ſtrait walk, bounded on each ſide with trees or ſhrubs. Alleys are diſtinguiſhed from paths, as being broad enough for two people to walk abreaſt. The word is in towns applied to narrow paſſages, to diſtinguiſh them from ſtreets, which are wider. Alley in perſpective, is that which is larger at the entrance than at the oppoſite extremity, in order to make it ſeem long.

ALL-FOU'RS, S. [from all and four] in gaming, a particular play, wherein the whole ſum a perſon gains each deal is limited to four, which are the higheſt, loweſt, and the knave of trumps, and the game, or the greateſt number to be made from tens and court cards; the latter of which are reckoned four for an ace, three for a king, two for a queen, and one for the knave; and he who has all theſe particulars, is ſaid to be all-fours.

ALL-HA'IL, Interj. [from all of æll, Sax. in compoſition, implying perfect, and hail, ſignifying health] a ſalutation or invocation made uſe of in acknowledgment of benefits, or in teſtimony of gratitude, and good-will. "All-hail, ye books, my true, my real friends." Walſh.

ALL-HA'LLOWN, S. [from all and hallow, of halgean, Sax. to conſecrate] the ſeaſon, or ſpace of time near All-Saint's day.

ALL-HA'LLOW-TIDE, S. [compounded of all, hallowe, and tide, from tid, Sax. tíd, Teut. taydan, Dalm. teiden, Sclav. and Boh. tezin, a week; hence whitſon-tide, or whitſon-week] that ſpace of time which is near All-Saint's day, or the 2d of November.

ALL-HE'AL, S. [from all, of æll, Sax. in compoſition, ſignifying perfection, and heal of hælan, Sax. heelen, Belg. heylen, Teut. to cure] in Botany, a ſpecies of iron wort, a very great vulnerary, and deriving its name from its great efficacy.

ALLI'ANCE, S. [alliance, Fr. from allier, of lier, to bind, or of ad to, and ligo, Lat. to bind] the union or connection of two perſons or two families by marriage. In a political ſenſe, the leagues or treaties between different ſtates for their mutual ſtate of defence.

ALLI'CIENCY, S. [from allicio, Lat. to intice, or allure] the quality of attracting, or drawing to; attraction.

ALLIGA'TION, S. [from alligate] the act of uniting, or the ſtate of things united, linked, or joined together. In Arithmetic, the rule, wherein queſtions are reſolved relating to the mixtures of different commodities, with their value, effects, &c. when ſo compounded.

ALL-JU'DGING, Part. [from all and judge] that which exerciſes judgment without controul, or partiality. "All judging heaven!" Rowe's Jane Shore.

A'LL-KNO'WING, Part. [from all and know] that which is intimately acquainted with every thing that is the object of knowledge; or whoſe knowledge is perfect without defect. "An all wiſe, all-knowing Being ſhowers "down, every day, his benefits, on the un-"thankful and undeſerving." Atterbury.

A'LLIOTH, S. in Aſtronomy, a ſtar, in the tail of the great Bear, of great uſe in obſervations at ſea.

ALLOCA'TION, [from alloco, Lat.] the act of putting one thing to another. In commerce, the admiſſion or allowance of an article to an account, and the paſſing it as ſuch. In the Exchequer it is an allowance made upon an account.

ALLO'DIAL, Adj. [from allodium, Lat.] in Law, that of which a perſon has an abſolute property, without paying any acknowledgment or ſervice, and is oppoſed to feudal.

ALLO'DIUM, S. [from all, and loſze, Teut. free, i. e.] a poſſeſſion which a man holds in his own right without any dependance, charge, ſervice or homage to be paid to a ſuperior lord.

ALLO'NGE, S. [allonger, Fr. of allonger] in Fencing, a paſs, or puſh, which derives its name from the lengthening of the arm in making it.

To ALLOO', V. A. [pronounced halloo, of haller, Fr. to make a noiſe; from holen, or hohlen, Teut. and halen, Belg. to call to] to ſet a dog on; or excite his courage, ſo as to ſeize one of his own, or any other ſpecies. "Alloo thy furious maſtiff." Phillips.

To ALLO'T, V. A. [from a and lot, of lot, Fr. hlot, Sax.] to diſtribute by lot; to aſſign a ſhare; to grant "Five days we do allot "thee for proviſion." Shakeſp. King Lear.

ALLO'TTING, S. [from allot] in commerce, is when a ſhip's goods are divided into different parcels, to be purchaſed by perſons whoſe names are wrote on pieces of paper, which are indifferently affixed to each of ſuch lots, and the goods thus divided without any partiality.

ALLO'TMENT, S. [from allot] the parcel, ſhare, lot, office, or condition aſſigned to any one.

ALLO'TERY, S. [from allot] that which is granted, or aſſigned to any perſon on a diviſion, diſtribution, or lot.

To ALLO'W, V. N. [allouër, Fr.] to confeſs, to yield, admit, grant, acknowledge, or aſſent to a principle, in oppoſition to contradiction.

diction. "The pow'r of muſic all our hearts "allow." Pope. To yield, or permit. To confer an honour on a perſon. To approve as juſt, or conſiſtent with one's duty. To give, to beſtow, to pay as a debt. "If we no tears "allow—To him." Waller. To grant without any obligation to do it. To make a conceſſion, abatement.

ALLO'WABLE, Adj. [from allow and abal, Sax. implying power, or poſſibility] that which may be granted, or permitted. That which does not imply an error, or contradiction. That which may be ſuffered, as repugnant or inconſiſtent with no laws.

ALLO'WABLENESS, S. [from allowable and neſs, of NS, a Gothic termination,] the quality of a thing, which denotes it to be lawful, proper to be granted or permitted, and no ways inconſiſtent with the rules of reaſon, the cuſtoms of a place, the written ſtatutes of a country, or the rules of ſcripture.

ALLO'WANCE, S. [from allow] the granting, conceſſion, or yielding aſſent to any doctrine, opinion, or principle. Permiſſion, licence, or conſent, applied to ſuperiors. Liberty, freedom from reſtraint, uſed with the word give. "Give allowance to their inclina- "tions." Locke. Conceſſion, in oppoſition to rigour, or ſeverity, uſed with the particle for. "Parents never give allowance for an in- "nocent paſſion." Swift. In Commerce, thoſe deductions granted at the cuſtom-houſe for goods rated by weight, and by dry, or liquid meaſure.

ALLO'WED, Part. [from allow] univerſally acknowledged; eſtabliſhed with reſpect to character. "There is no ſlander in an allowed "fool." Shakeſp. Twelfth Night. In commerce, it is written in the margin of an account of expences, oppoſite to ſuch articles, as are granted.

ALLO'Y, S. [See Allay] baſer metal, mixt with that of greater value; made uſe of in coinage to give the metal it is mixed with a greater hardneſs, by which it might be kept from wearing; or to encreaſe its dimenſions. "Alloy is baſer metal mixed with it." An abatement or leſſening applied to the paſſions; and uſed both in a bad and a good ſenſe. "Sin- "cere and pure without allay" Atterb.

ALL-PO'WERFUL, Adj. [from all, of all, Sax. or all, Goth. and powerful] a power capable of operating without defect, or controul, and of producing every thing that is conſiſtent with infinite wiſdom. "O all-powerful "Being, the leaſt motion of whoſe will can "create or deſtroy a world." Swift.

ALL-SAINTS-DAY, S. [from all, ſaints, and day] the day ſet apart by the church to commemorate the exemplary lives and noble fortitude of all the ſaints and martyrs; added as a ſupplementary day to the reſt of the feſtivals, that thoſe who were worthy of remembrance, might not be paſſed over without notice, and that the human mind might be more ſtrongly incited to exemplary piety, or pious martyrdom; by conſidering the number of thoſe which have preceded in thoſe ſhining paths.

ALL-SEE'R, S. [from all and ſee] he that is preſent every where; he that ſees all things. "That high all-ſeer which dallied with." Shakeſp. Rich. III.

ALL-SEE'ING, Part. [from all and ſee] indued with the power of ſeeing every thing; omniſcient. "That all-ſeeing and all-making mind." Dryd.

A'LL-SOU'LS-DAY, S. [from all, ſoul, and day] a feſtival obſerved by the church of Rome, on the 2d of November, with a particular ſervice relating to the ſouls, ſuppoſed to be in purgatory.

ALL-SUFFI'CIENT, Part. [from all and ſufficient] capable of procuring every thing which is the object of power or wiſdom; abſolutely perfect in himſelf. "He is every way "perfect, and all-ſufficient." Norris. Perfectly adapted to; applied to evidence, capable of producing all that confirmation, or conviction, for which it is intended.

To ALLU'DE, V. A. [alludo, Lat.] to have a diſtant reſpect to a thing, without mentioning it expreſly; to hint at. "True it is, "that many things of this nature be alluded unto." Hooker.

A'LLUM, S. [alúmen, Lat. alum, Teut.] a foſſil ſalt, or white mineral, ſeparated from earth by waſhing it with water, which being impregnated with its ſalts, is after boiled and evaporated. Italy produces the greateſt quantity, and the beſt allum of any country. That of Rome or Civita Vecchia is reddiſh, becauſe the earth from whence it is taken, is of that colour. The allum of England is in great pieces or lumps, clear and tranſparent like cryſtal; and is more or leſs fine, according as it is well or ill purified. It is made of a ſtone of a bluiſh colour found in Yorkſhire, urine, and ſea-weed. The allum of Liege, or Meziers, is of the ſame nature as the Engliſh, excepting that it is ſomewhat fatter. Allum of the Levant differs but little from thoſe already mentioned. The large is the beſt, and the mine lies about three or four days journey from Smyrna. There is another ſort brought from Conſtantinople, which is reckoned preferable to it.

ALLU'MINOUS, Adj. [from alúmen, Lat.] that which has the properties of allum; or that which is mixed with allum. Waters of this kind are prepared by dyers, to make their ſtuffs take their colours the better; and thoſe which are to be crimſon, muſt be ſteeped in water made very ſtrong with this ingredient.

To ALLU'MINATE, [allúmer, Fr. of alúmen, Lat.] to embelliſh. In Painting, to waſh prints with allum water, to keep the colours from ſinking or running.

To ALLU'RE, [leurer, Fr. loren, or leuren, Belg. leuder, Teut. ludro, Ital. or belæwan, Sax.] to entice; or attract, either in a good or bad ſenſe; to perſuade or draw, by the addition of ſomething beſides the intrinſic value and advantages of the object. "In laws it has al" ways ſeemed needful to add rewards, which " may more allure unto good." Hooker. To charm, or affect the mind with a ſenſation of pleaſure. " Each flatt'ring hope, and each alluring joy." Lyttleton.

ALLU'RE, S. [loer vogbel, Teut. luder, Belg. a betrayer] originally ſome artificial bird, made uſe of by bird-catchers, to entice birds into their traps. Figuratively, any thing that entices, or draws a perſon into the power of another. " The rather to train them to his " allure" Hayw.

ALLU'REMENT, S. [from allure] that which has the power of enticing by its charms; temptation; enticement. " Adam, by his wife's allurement, fell" Par. Reg.

ALLU'RER, S. [from allure and er,] the perſon, who tempts, ſeduces by fair ſpeeches; entices or inveigles.

ALLU'RINGLY, Adv. [from alluring, and ly of lic, Sax.] in a manner proper to entice, tempt, inveigle, or ſeduce.

ALLU'RINGNESS, S. [from alluring and neſs, of neſſe, or nyſſe, Sax. or NS, Goth.] a quality, whoſe charms have ſuch effect upon the mind, as to prevail on it to engage in any action, either good or bad.

ALLU'SION, S. [from ad to, and ludere, to play] ſomething ſpoken, with reference to a thing already known, and on that account not expreſſed. A reference; hint, or implication.

ALLU'SIVE, Adj. [from alluſum, ſupine of alludo] that which does not mention a thing expreſly, but comprehends it by implication; that which hints at ſomething not fully expreſſed; figurative, in oppoſition to plain, or expreſs.

ALLU'SIVELY, Adv. [from alluſive and ly of lic, Sax.] in a manner wherein a reference is made to ſomething not expreſſed, but implied.

ALLU'SIVENESS, S. [from alluſive and neſs of neſ, neſſe, or nyſſe, Sax. and NS, Goth.] the quality of expreſſing a thing by implication, or by reference, oppoſed to expreſsly, directly, or plainly.

ALLU'VION, S. [alluvio, Lat. from ad, to, and lavo, to waſh] in its primary ſenſe a flowing, or ſwelling of waters near any land.

ALLU'VIOUS, Adj. [from alluvium, Lat.] that which is waſhed away from one place and carried to another.

A'LL-WISE, Adj. [from all of æll, Sax. and wiſe] that which is indued with abſolute, perfect, or infinite wiſdom. " There is an in- " finite, eternal, all-wiſe mind governing the " affairs of the world." South.

To ALL'Y, V. A. [from allier, Fr. of ad, and ligo,] to join together, or unite by kindred, friendſhip, or intereſt. To reſemble, or be like, in the paſſive. " They are indeed re- " motely allied to Virgil's ſenſe." Dryd.

ALL'Y, S. [in the plural allies, from allie, Fr.] one who is joined to, or has connections with another, owing to ſome contract, whether that of marriage or treaty; and is applied both to perſons and kingdoms. One who is united to another by friendſhip.

ALMACA'NTAR, [from almocantar, almucantar, or almacantharat, Arab.] in aſtronomy, a circle drawn parallel to the horizon. It is generally uſed in the plural, and ſignifies a ſeries of parallel circles drawn through the ſeveral degrees of the meridian. Almacantar's ſtaff, a mathematical inſtrument, made of pear-tree or box-wood, with an arch containing 15 deg. formerly uſed to find the altitude of the ſun at its riſing, in order to diſcover its amplitude, and the variation of the compaſs.

ALMAGE'ST, S. [of almagiſte,' Arab. which they ſubſtituted in their tranſlation for its title συνταξιν μαγιςη, Gr.] the name of a celebrated work of Ptolemy, containing a collection of geometrical problems, and aſtronomical obſervations made by the ancients.

A'LMANAC, or A'LMANACK, S. [from almanach, Fr. of al, Arab. and manah, Heb. but moſt probably from al, maen, and *acht*e, Teut.] a table or calendar wherein the days of the weeks, faſts, feſtivals, changes of the moon, variation of time between clocks and the ſun, eclipſes, time of high water at London Bridge, beginnings and endings of terms, &c. are noted for the enſuing year. The modern Almanack reſembles the Faſti of the antient Romans. As the Almanack-makers were formerly great eſpouſers of judicial aſtrology, or pretended to predict future events by the ſtars, Hen. III. of France made an edict in 1579, " That none of that tribe ſhould for the future preſume to publiſh predictions relating to the affairs of the ſtate, or of private perſons, in terms either expreſs or covert."

ALMA'NDIN, or ALMAND'INE, [almandine, Ital.] a precious ſtone, ſomewhat like the ruby, but fouler and lighter than the oriental, and rather reſembling the granate in colour.

ALMIG'HTINESS, S. [from almighty and neſs of nes, neſſe, nyſſe, Sax. or NS, Goth] that attribute of the Deity, wherein he is conſidered as able to perform every thing that is the object of abſolute, perfect, uncontroulable, and infinite power; Omnipotence.

ALMI'GHTY, Adj. [formerly ſpelt, allmighty, from ælmightig, Sax. from æll, Sax. or all, Goth. and mighty] that which is poſſeſſed of perfect, abſolute, uncontroulable, or unlimited power; that which can do every thing that infinite wiſdom can dictate, or infinite power can execute. " Lord almighty, juſt and " true are thy ways." Rev. xv. 3. and xvi. 7.

A'LMOND, S. [amande, Fr. amandola, Ital.] a fruit contained in a ſtone full of little cells, which is incloſed in a tough ſkin. They are divided into ſweet and bitter, on account of their different taſtes. The ſweet are accounted nouriſhing; if not eat in too large quantities. The milky juice ſqueezed from them after they have been ſteeped in warm water and blanched, i. e. peeled, is very good for conſumptive and pleuretic perſons, on account of its oily and balſamic particles. The French lapidaries give this name, Almonds or Amandes, to thoſe pieces of rock cryſtal which are cut with a wheel, wheel, into forms reſembling this fruit, and are uſed to adorn chandeliers of glaſs, and other pieces of furniture made of glaſs, or cryſtal.

A'LMONDBURY, S. a corruption of Albanbury, or St. Alban's town, which name it received from the church dedicated to St. Alban, by Paulinus the apoſtle. It is ſituated on the Calder in the north-riding of Yorkſhire. In the beginning of the Saxon times it was a very conſiderable place, and a royal ſeat. But was burnt in the wars between Edwin the prince of theſe territories, Penda the Mercian, and Ceadwal the Briton. The cinders which are found vitrified, rather than burnt, ſeem to ſhew that the fire which deſtroyed it, was probably very fierce and vehement. Such is the fate of earthly things! It is now a little obſcure village, and has no traces of its former opulence but its ruins.

A'LMOND-TREE, S. [from almond and tree] the tree which bears almonds; its leaves and flowers reſemble thoſe of the peach, but its fruit is ſomewhat longer and more compreſſed; the outer green coat is thiner and drier when ripe, and the ſhell is not ſo rugged.

A'LMONDS OF THE THROAT, or TONSILS, improperly ſtiled Almonds of the ears. See Tonſils.

AL'MOND-FURNACE, or AL'MAN-FURNACE, S. See Furnace.

AL'MONER, or ALM'NER, S. [aumonier, Fr. of eleemoſynarius, Lat.] a perſon employed by a prince to diſtribute his alms to the poor. The biſhop of London is lord-almoner to his majeſty king George II. whom God long preſerve.

A'LMONRY, S. [from almoner] the place, wherein the almoner keeps his office, or diſtributes the alms to the poor.

ALMO'ST, Adv. [al-meeſt, Belg.] applied to action, near performing it. "They be almoſt ready to ſtone me." Exod. xvii. 4. Applied to number or multitude, a conſiderable majority, little leſs than the whole. "Came "almoſt the whole city together." Acts, xiii. 44. Applied to time, very near the period mentioned. "When ſeven days were almoſt "ended." Acts, xxi. 27. Applied to the effect of an argument, not far from perſuading, or conviction. "Almoſt thou perſuadeſt me to "be a Chriſtian." Acts, xxvi. 28.

ALMOXARIFA'GO, S. [Span.] a duty of two and a half per cent. paid, in Spaniſh America, on all bull's hides, upon their exportation on board European veſſels.

ALMOUCHI'QUOIS, S. a ſavage nation, near the river Chovocovet, and the iſland Bacchus in Canada, North America, who ſhave their foreheads to the crown, wear long locks on the hind part of their heads, tied in knots, and adorned with feathers; their faces are painted red and black; they plant tobacco, have great plenty of wines, and do not quit their ſettlements, like the other ſavages.

AL'MS, S [never uſed but in the plural, of elmes, or elmeſſe, Sax. from Ελεημοσυνη, from Ελεος, Gr.] money, or other neceſſaries given to relieve the neceſſities of the poor and diſtreſſed, including in it a tender ſympathy in their afflictions, and a pious readineſs to relieve them. "Do not your alms before men." Matt. vi. 1.

ALMS-BA'SKET, S. [from alms and baſket] a baſket carried about, in foreign countries, to collect proviſions, and other alms, for the benefit of a convent or religious houſe.

ALMS-DEED, S [from alms and deed] an act of charity; or ſomething done out of compaſſion, to relieve the diſtreſſes and wants of others.

ALMS-GI'VER, S. [from alms and give] one who is charitable; or is fond of relieving the neceſſities of the poor.

ALMS-HOUSE, S. [from alms and houſe] a houſe endowed by legacies, or other donations, for the lodging and ſupport of the decayed, and poor.

ALMS-MAN, S. [from alms and man] a man who is ſupported by charity or alms; one who belongs to an alms-houſe, and wears the gown appropriated to it. "My gay apparel "for an alms-man's gown." Shakeſp. Rich. III.

A'LNAGER, A'LNEGER, or AULNE'GER, S. [from aulnage, aûnage, Fr.] in its primary ſignification, a meaſurer by the ell; applied to an officer who is to inſpect the ſize of woollen cloth throughout the land, with reſpect to the length, breadth, fabric, and the ſeals ordained for that purpoſe. But the alnager, at preſent, ſeems to be only the collector of the duty granted to the king for that commodity; and the other branches of his office, are ſupplied by two other perſons, namely, a ſearcher and meaſurer.

A'LNEY, S. [olaneg, Sax. from Olan an eg, an iſland] a ſmall iſland between Overſbridge and Mayſemore, near the city of Glouceſter, famous for a ſingle combat between Edmund Ironſide, and Canute, the Daniſh king, in the ſight of their armies, which was to determine the fate of both nations; the conteſt was long and doubtful, but the latter finding himſelf wounded, and too weak for his antagoniſt, propoſed the kingdom's being divided between them; which being agreed to, the ſouth part was allotted to Edmund, and the north to Canute; but the former dying ſoon after, not without ſuſpicion of being poiſoned, Canute ſeized on the whole. In order to put a check to the ambition of princes, the treachery of miniſters, and the effuſion of Chriſtian blood, which their preſent differences occaſion, it were to be wiſhed that ſome ſuch expedient as this might be agreed upon by crowned heads for the future.

A'LNWICK, or A'LANWICK, S. [pronounced Anwick, Ealnwic, Sax. from Ealn or Alne, the name of a river, and wic, a town, ſo called, from its ſituation] a ſmall market-town, on the north ſide of the hill, near the river Alne, or Ale, famous for a battle between our brave anceſtors and the Scots, in 1174, wherein they took William, king of Scots priſoner, and preſented him to Henry II. It is defended by an old caſtle, which being beſieged by Malcolm III. king of Scots in 1097, and on the point of ſurrendering, a ſoldier, who pretended to reach him the keys at the point of his ſword, took that opportunity to ſtab him, and killed him on the ſpot. His ſon Edward, in a vain attempt to revenge his death, was killed likewiſe. This caſtle juſt mentioned, belonged to the Piercies, earls of Northumberland, and ſeems to be no leſs elegant as a palace, than ſtrong as a caſtle. The method of making men free, is as ſingular, as ridiculous. On St. Mark's day the perſons to be made free, which they term leaping the well, meet on horſeback, with ſwords by their ſides, dreſſed in white, and white night-caps, and attended by the four chamberlains and caſtle-bailiff; when they come to the place called the freeman's well, they all jump in, and ſometimes ſink in mud up to their chins. This cuſtom is owing to king John's having ſtuck faſt in this very place, who made this part of their charter, as a puniſhment to the inhabitants for neglecting to mend the road. The town is populous, and well built; has a market every Saturday, a fair for black cattle once a fortnight, and five other fairs in the year, one called Lucy, a week before Chriſtmas; another called Palm-fair, a week before Eaſter; the third on May 1, O. S. the fourth on the 23d of July; and the fifth on Michaelmas-day. It is governed by four chamberlains, choſe once in two years out of the common-council, conſiſting of twenty-four. It is 310 miles from London. Lat. 55 deg. 24 min. N. Long. 21 deg. 20 min. W.

A'LOES, S. [אהלים achalim, Heb. αλοη, Gr. aloe, Lat.] this word is applied to a tree, a plant, and a medicinal juice, extracted from the plant. The wood grows in China, in the kingdom of Lao, and in Cochin China. It is a large tree, or at leaſt about the ſize of the olive, reſembles it likewiſe in its leaves, and its fruit is red, like a cherry. The wood of the trunk is of three colours; under the bark it is black and heavy; the next wood is of a tanned colour, light, and reſembles rotten wood; but the heart is the tambac, or calembac, which is dearer in the Indies than gold itſelf, and was reckoned by the Siameſe the moſt valuable preſent they could make to Louis XIV. Tavernier ſays, he ſaw at Iſpahan, a log of this wood, about ſix feet long, and two in compaſs, which coſt 40,000 pardoes, or 54,000 French livres.

ALOE'TIC, Adj. [from aloes] that which conſiſts of aloes.

ALOE'TICAL, Adj. [from aloes] medicines compoſed of aloes.

ALO'FT, Adv. [loſter, Dan.] in the air, in oppoſition to the ground; on high; above. "Love has wings and ſoars aloft."

ALO'NE, Adj. [from al-een, or alleen, Belg. allein, Teut. or all and ain, Goth.] without a companion. "It is not good for man to be alone." Gen. ii. 18. Without any aſſiſtance. Excluſively of all others; ſolely.

ALO'NG, Adv. [au longue, Fr. al lungo, Ital.] at full length; proſtrate on the ground. Motion or progreſſion meaſured lengthwiſe. "A firebrand carried along." Bac. Uſed with all, for a continuance, or during a whole ſpace of time. "They were all along, a croſs, untoward people." South. Throughout; or from one end to the other, applied to writings. After come, it implies attendance, and encouragement to proceed. "Come then my friend, my "genius come along." Pope.

ALO'OF, Adv. [from all of the Sax. aell, Goth. or all, and off,] uſed with the particle from, at a diſtance, which is within ſight. "Our palace ſtood aloof from ſtreets." Dryd. When applied to perſons; it implies a diſtance occaſioned by caution and circumſpection. "And make the cowards ſtand aloof." Dryd. At a diſtance, ſo as not to appear as a principal, or party in any deſign. "It is neceſſary that "the queen join, for if ſhe ſtand aloof, there will be ſuſpicions." Suckling. Not connected with; having no relation to. Among ſailors, the ſame as keep your luff; a word which implies, that the perſon at the helm, is to keep the ſhip near the wind, when ſailing on a quarter wind.

ALOPE'CIA, S. [from αλωπηξ, a fox, becauſe that animal is ſuppoſed to be very much ſubject to this diſtemper] a diſtemper, wherein all, or a greater part of the hair falls off.

ALO'SE, S. a fiſh, reſembling the ſardine, which grows to the ſize of a ſalmon, called a Fiſh of Paſſage, or, of a ſeaſon, becauſe it never appears in rivers, but in the ſpring.

ALOU'CHI, S. a ſweet ſcented gum, which diſtils from the tree, that produces the white cinnamon.

ALO'UD, Adv. [from a and loud] with an increaſed ſtrength of voice, ſo as to effect the ear more ſtrongly, or to be heard at a great diſtance. With a great noiſe. "Strangled he "lies, yet ſeems to cry aloud." Waller.

ALO'W, Adv. [from a and low, by poetical liberty inſtead of below] in a low place; near the ground, in oppoſition to aloft, or above. "And now alow and now aloft they fly." Dryd.

ALPA'GNA. S. an animal reſembling the llamus and vigognas, which the Peruvians uſe as a beaſt of burthen, and make it carry 100 wt. Of its wool they make ſtuffs, ropes, and bags; of its bones, tools for weavers; and of its excrements, fires, both for their chambers and kitchens.

A'LPHA, S. [derived from the אלף aleph, Heb. to learn, whence it was uſed to ſignify the leader, or firſt of a company; in which ſenſe the Jews called the firſt letter of their alphabet, alph; the Syrians, olaph; the Arabians, elif; and the Greeks, alpha, the firſt letter of the Greek alphabet, which likewiſe ſtanding for one among their numerals, is uſed figuratively to signify the first in order of time, &c. as omega, the last letter in their alphabet, signifies the last; in allusion to this, Christ says, in Rev. vii. 8. 11. xxi. 6. and xxii. 13. "I am alpha and omega." In composition it signifies negation, or denying the sense which the word would bear without it. Thus Βατὸς Gr. is something accessible; but when the α is prefixed to it, as in ἀβατὸς, Gr. it signifies a denial of what it signified before; and implies that the thing is not accessible, or is inaccessible.

A'LPHABET, S. [from αλφα alpha, and βητα, the two first letters of the Greeks, of א aleph, and ב beth, the two first of the Hebrews] a table of all the letters which compose the syllables in any language, and are marks to convey the simple sounds in forming words made use of. Moderns have found great fault with those that are now in use, charging them with being inaccurate, precarious, and confused; redundant in allotting different letters to the same sound, and deficient in not having letters enough to express all the varieties of sound, which arise from the different combinations of vowels and consonants. To obviate these defects, some very ingenious persons have undertaken the construction of new alphabets; but as they have appeared rather specious than useful, they have never had the luck to recommend themselves to practice, or to make their way into the world, further than in a volume by which they were communicated. The number of letters in the alphabet differs in most of the languages we know of; the English may have twenty-six; the French twenty-three; the Hebrew, Syrian, Chaldaic and Samaritan, twenty-two each; the Arabic twenty-eight; the Persian thirty-one; the Turkish thirty-three; the Georgian thirty-six; the Coptic thirty-two; the Muscovians forty-three; the Greek twenty-four; the Latin twenty-two; the Sclavonic twenty-seven; the Saxon twenty-four; the Gothic twenty-five; the Islandic twenty-two; the Dutch twenty-six; the Spanish twenty-seven; the Italian twenty; the Ethiopic two hundred and two. The Chinese were formerly supposed to have no alphabet, properly speaking, as having only hieroglyphics, which stood for whole words, and amounted to 80,000; but an ingenious professor of the French academy has lately demonstrated the Chinese themselves to have been a colony of the Egyptians, that they derived their language from that fertile source of knowledge, which watered the whole world, and that their supposed characters are not hieroglyphics, but combinations of letters, which he has resolved into their primitive elements, and shewn to be the antient letters of the Egyptians, though very much altered by time, corrupted by ignorance, and obliterated for want of tracing them sooner to their origin. Alphabet, in Commerce, is an index used by merchants and traders, having the twenty-four letters, in their natural order, affixed to different leaves, in which they set down the surnames and christian names of those with whom they open accounts, with references to the folio, in which such accounts are opened. Among bookbinders and gilders, it implies tools having each a letter of the alphabet, with which they mark the back of the volume; which they call lettering.

To AL'PHABET, V. A. [from alphabet the subst.] to range in the order of the alphabet.

ALPHABE'TIC, or ALPHABE'TICAL, Adj. [from alphabet] placed in the same order as in the alphabet. "Digested into alphabetical order." Swift.

ALPHABE'TICALLY, Adv. [from alphabetical, and ly of lic, Sax.] in the same order as in the alphabet. "A dictionary, alphabetically containing the words of the language." Holder.

A'LPHÆNIX, S. [of al, and phœnix, i. e. the phœnix] a name given to white barley sugar, in order to inhance its supposed value. It is made of common sugar, boiled till it becomes viscous, after which it is laid on a marble table, rubbed with oil of almonds, and moulded into various forms with a brass crotchet.

ALPHE'TA, S. in Astronomy. See Lauda Corona.

ALPHO'NSINE, S. [from Alphonsus Ferrarius, its inventor] in Surgery, an instrument made use of to extract bullets, consisting of three branches, which are closed together by a ring that slides over them. Bib. Anatom. Med. t. ii. 517.

ALPHO'NSO, Adj. [from Alphonso] in Astronomy, applied to the tables of Ptolemy's Almagest, corrected by Alphonso XII. king of Castile.

ALPHO'S, or A'LPHUS, S. [from αλφανω, Gr. from its changing the colour of the skin] in Medicine, a distemper, in which the skin becomes rough, and variegated with white spots.

AL'PINE, Adj. [alpinus, Lat.] that which may be met with on the Alps.

ALPI'STLE, or AL'PIA, S. a kind of seed of an oval figure; of a pale yellow, inclining to a sable colour; bright and glossy; made use of to feed birds with, when intended for breeding.

A'LPS, S. [Alpes, Lat. it has no singular] a long chain of mountains, beginning at the mouth of the Varo in Piedmont, and terminating near Asia, a river of Italy, on the Adriatic Sea, or Gulph of Venice. These mountains divide Italy from France, Switzerland, and Germany; have but few passes, of very difficult access, if not impracticable, and are on that account a great security to Piedmont from France. Hannibal, the famous Carthaginian lost most of his elephants in attempting the passage; and is reported to have made his way through some part of them, by making a road with boiling vinegar.

A'LQUIR, S. called also CANTAR, a liquid measure, used in Portugal for oil, containing six canadars or cavadas. Likewise a dry measure for grain at Lisbon, two and an half of which is an English bushel.

ALRA'MELECH, S. [אלרמלך Arab. from אל al, an Arabic particle, equal to the in English רם Rom. high, and מלך Melech, a prince or king, i. e. the high prince or king] in Aſtronomy, the name of a ſtar of the firſt magnitude, called Arcturus.

ALRE'ADY, Adj. pronounced as if the a was dropped, [alreed, Belg. from all of the Saxon æll, and all, Gothic, and ready] the time preſent; even now, "Methinks already I your "tears ſurvey." Pope. Before the preſent time; in a time paſt; "Which hath already "been anſwered." Hooker.

A'LRESFORD, S. [from Alre, the name of a river, and ford] a market town in Hampſhire, ſituated on the river Alre, from whence it derives its name. It was once ſo opulent, that there was no collection made in the town for the poor, and not a ſingle almſman in the pariſh. But being burnt down in 1710, this ſingular circumſtance ceaſed. The town however has been handſomely rebuilt; and we cannot but mention, with honour, the generoſity of the gentry in its neighbourhood, who not only contributed largely to the relief of the poor, but likewiſe furniſhed them with timber gratis for the building of their houſes. It has a bailiff and eight burgeſſes, a market on Thurſdays for ſheep; a fair on the 24th of June for ſheep and horſes; has the honour of an elegant ſeat of the duke of Bolton near it; and is ſixty miles from London.

ALSA'CE, S. [Alſatia, Lat. Elſas, Teut. from the river ell or ill] a province in Germany, almoſt entirely yielded to the French at the treaty of Munſter; bounded on the W. by the mountains of Vogue, or Voſge; on the S. by Switzerland and Volfgaw; on the E. by the Rhine, which ſeparates it from Baden, Ortenaw, and Briſgau; and on the N. by the Palatinate of the Rhine. It is, in general, very pleaſant and fruitful, abounding in all ſorts of grain, excellent and durable vines, paſtures, fruit-trees, garden vegetables, flax, tobacco, wood, &c. Its trade extends very far into Germany on one ſide of the Rhine, and into all the countries ſituated between Straſbourg and the mouth of that river on the other. But ſuch is the indolence of the inhabitants, as I am informed by a native, that the greateſt part of this commerce is carried on by ſtrangers, who make no ſmall advantage of their indolence. The preſent number of inhabitants is reckoned at about half a million. In Upper Alſace are thirty-two towns; in Lower Alſace thirty-nine, great and ſmall; and in both a thouſand large and ſmall villages. The common language of the inhabitants is the German; but perſons of polite education learn the French: their religion is partly Lutheran, and partly the Roman Catholic.

A'LSHAM, A'LYSHAM, or A'LESHAM, S. [of alyſſan, Sax. to redeem, and ham, Sax. a ſuffrage] a ſmall town in Norfolk on the river Yare, noted for knitters. The manor of Sextons is held from hence by the will of the lord. Its fairs for lean cattle, ordinary horſes, &c. are on March 23, and the laſt Tueſday in September. It lies 117 miles from London.

A'LSO, Conjunct. [alſwa, Sax. all-ſoo, Belg.] it is uſed to ſhew, that what had been affirmed of one ſentence or perſon, holds good of the ſucceeding part of the period, and of another perſon. "Surely thou alſo waſt one "of them." Mat. xxvi. 33. In the ſame manner; likewiſe. When at the end of a ſentence or a period, it implies beſides. "Sue-"courer of many and of myſelf alſo." Rom. xvi. 7.

A'LTAR, S. [altare, Lat. as Junius obſerves, adapted into all languages, on the eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity, and varied according to the different dialects of the country] a kind of table, or raiſed place, whereon the antient ſacrifices were offered. "There Abra-"ham built an altar to the Lord." Since the eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity, that place of the church, where the communion is received, or the table on which the vaſes and the elements of bread and wine are placed; figuratively, Chriſt himſelf, to whom we bring all our offerings and ſervices. Among the antient Romans the altar was a kind of a pedeſtal, either ſquare, round, or triangular, adorned with ſculptures and inſcriptions. In Aſtronomy, a conſtellation of the ſouthern hemiſphere, conſiſting of ſeven ſtars.

A'LTAR-CLOTH, S. [from altar and cloth] the cloth which immediately covers the communion-table.

To A'LTER, V. A. [alterer, Fr. from alter, Lat. another] to change; to make a thing different from what it is; uſed both of a part and the whole of a thing, and applied both in a good and a bad ſenſe. "He ſhall not alter it a good "for a bad." Lev. xxvii. 10. To vary, or differ in ſenſe; to corrupt the ſenſe of an author or period, by eraſing ſome of his words, or adding and changing them for others. Uſed neuterly, to change; to become different from what it has been: "The weather alters." "His countenance altered."

A'LTERABLE, Adj. [from alter and abal, Sax. implying poſſibility, or power, alterable, Fr.] that which may be changed, or be made to appear different from what it is. "Al-"terable by a thouſand accidents." Rogers.

A'LTERABLENESS, S. [from alterable and neſs of nes, neſſe, nyſſe, Saxo. NS, Goth.] the quality of being changed; or liable to have its preſent properties and appearance changed by external or internal cauſes.

A'LTERABLY, Adv. [from alterable, and ly of lic, Sax.] in a manner that will admit of changes.

A'LTERANT, Part. [alterant, Fr.] that which has the power of producing changes in a body. "Whether the body be alterant, or "altered." Bac.

ALTERA'TION, S. [alteration, Fr.] the act of changing the form, or purport of a writing; the ſhape and other qualities of a body; the properties and faculties of the mind, and making them different from what they were.

The change itſelf, or the ſtate of a thing changed. "By ſuch, and ſucceeding alterations." Swift.

ALTERATIVE, Adj. [from alter] that which has the power of making changes. In Medicine, ſuch remedies as produce a change in the humours of the body, without any apparent operation, and are ſuch as deſtroy ſome prevailing acrimony in the primæ viæ, or firſt paſſages and juices; erroneous.

To ALTERCATE, V. N. [altercor, Lat.] to wrangle, or contend with another; to diſpute.

ALTERCA'TION, S. [altercatio, Lat. altercation, Fr.] a debate or diſpute, or any ſubject, between friends, including a warm eſpouſal or defence of the contrary ſide of a queſtion, but not ſo great as what is involved in the idea of a quarrel. "Little elſe than a perpetual wrangling and altercation." Hakewell on Prov.

ALTE'RN, Adj. [alternus, Lat.] in Trigonometry, the baſe, ſo called, is either the ſum, or difference of the ſides of an oblique triangle; if the true baſe is the ſum, the altern baſe is the difference; but if the true baſe be the difference, the altern baſe is the ſum of the ſides.

ALTE'RN, S. [alternus, Lat.] that which ſucceeds another by turns; ſucceſſive, or alternately; that which follows by ſucceſſion. "The greater to have rule by day,—The leſs "by night, altern." Par. Loſt.

ALTE'RNACY, S. [from alternate] the ſucceſſion or following of one action after another in its turn.

ALTE'RNATE, Adj. [alternus, Lat.] things which ſucceed or follow one another by turns; ſucceſſive. "Bid alternate paſſions fall "and riſe." Pope. In Botany, applied to the poſition of the leaves of a plant, it implies, that the leaves on each ſide of the ſtalk, or branch, do not ſtand directly oppoſite, but between, or a little higher, than each other. In Geometry, applied to angles, it ſignifies the internal one, and is made by a line cutting two parallels, and lying on oppoſite ſides of it. Alternate, in Heraldry, is applied to the ſituation of the quarters of a coat; thus, in quarterly, ecartelé, the firſt and fourth are alternate, and of the ſame nature. Alternate proportion, is when, of four proportional numbers, the antecedent of the former is compared to the antecedent of the latter, and the conſequent of the former is compared to the conſequent of the latter.

ALTE'RNATE, S. [alternus, Lat.] that which follows another in ſucceſſion, or by turns; viciſſitude. "Grateful alternates of "ſubſtantial peace." Prior.

ALTE'RNATELY, Adv. [from alternate, and ly of lic, Sax.] in ſuch a manner that the thing which precedes ſhall follow that which comes after it. Thus, when we ſay, that darkneſs follows light, and light darkneſs, they are ſaid to follow each other alternately.

ALTE'RNATENESS, S. [from alternate and neſs, of nes, neſſe, nyſſe, Sax. or NS. Goth.] the quality whereby things mutually precede and ſucceed each other; or ſometimes go before, and ſometimes follow each other.

ALTERNA'TION, S. [from alternate] a ſucceſſion, wherein that which preceded returns again, after ſome period or viciſſitude. "The defect of alternation would utterly "impugn the generation of all things." Brown's Vulg. Err. In Arithmetic, the different changes, alterations of place, or combinations, that any propoſed number are capable of; which is found by a continual multiplication of all the numbers beginning at unity, and ending with the laſt number of the things to be varied.

ALTE'RNATIVE, S. [from alternate, of alternus, Lat.] a choice of two things, whereby, if one be rejected, the other muſt be accepted. "A ſtrange alternative!" Young.

ALTE'RNATIVELY, Adv. [from alternative, and ly of lic, Sax. implying like, or manner] in ſuch a manner, that the thing or perſon which goes before, ſhall return again in ſucceſſion, or ſo as to follow that which it preceded; by turns; mutually; reciprocally. "An appeal alternatively made." Ayliff's Peerage.

ALTE'RNATIVENESS, S. [from alternative and neſs, of nes, neſſe, nyſſe, Sax. or NS, Goth.] the quality or ſtate wherein things by turns precede and follow each other; reciprocation.

ALTE'RNITY, S. [from alternus] a ſtate wherein there is a continual ſucceſſion, change, or viciſſitude. "Without the alter-"nity and viciſſitude of reſt." Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ALTHÆ'A, S. [from ἀλθαίνω, Gr. of ἀλθαίνω, Gr. to heal] in Botany, the marſh-mallows.

A'LTHORPE, S. [of a, of adel, Sax. noble, and thorp, Sax. a village] a beautiful ſeat of the Hon. John Spencer, Eſq; in Northamptonſhire, rebuilt by earl Robert, in the reign of James I. and celebrated for its gallery. The park was laid out by Le Nôtre, after that of Greenwich; there is a noble piece of water near it, on which is a Venetian gondola.

ALTHOUGH, Adv. [pronounced as if written altho', from all and though, of thah, Sax. doch, Belg. and Teut.] uſed to imply that a thing or concluſion may be allowed and maintained, notwithſtanding ſomething ſeemingly inconſiſtent had been allowed, admitted, or granted: Notwithſtanding. "We all know "that many things are believed, although they "be intricate." Hooker.

ALTIME'TRY, S. [Αλτιμετρια, Gr. from altus, Lat. high, and μετρεω, Gr. to meaſure] the art of taking, or meaſuring heights, whether acceſſible or inacceſſible.

A'LTITUDE, S. [altitudo, Lat.] height, or the diſtance of any thing from the ground meaſured upwards. "Ten maſts attached,

"make

"make not the altitude." Shakesp. Lear. Superiority of dignity; or height of preferment. Applied to virtue, the highest pitch of perfection. "Even to the altitude of his virtue." Shak. Coriol. In Geometry, the height of a body above the ground, or the horizon. Altitude of the eye, in Perspective, a right line, let fall perpendicular to the geometrical plane. Altitude of a figure, is the length of a perpendicular line let fall from the vortex to the base, i. e. from the top to the bottom. Altitude of things on the surface of the earth is divided into accessible and inaccessible; accessible, is that whose base you can approach, so as to measure the distance between your station and the object on the ground. Inaccessible altitude, is that whose foot or bottom cannot be approached, on account of something intervening. Altitude, in Astronomy, or the height of any object above the horizon, is divided into real or apparent: Apparent altitude, is the arch of a verticle circle, intercepted between the sensible horizon and the center of the object. Real or true altitude, is the arch of a verticle circle, intercepted between the center of an object and the rational horizon. Meridian altitude of the sun, &c. is an arch of the meridian, intercepted between the horizon and the center of an object. Altitude of the pole, is the height of the pole above the horizon, or an arch of the meridian, intercepted between the pole and the horizon. Altitude of the equinoctial, is its elevation above the horizon, and is always equal to the compliment of the latitude, or the compliment of the altitude of the pole. Altitude of the sexagesimal degree, is its height, counted from the place where it rises. Parallax of altitude, is an arch of a verticle circle, intercepted between the true and observed place of a star, or other object. Altitude of motion, according to Dr. Wallis, is the measure of any motion, computed according to the line of direction of the moving force.

A'LTO-RELIEVO, S. See Relievo.

AL'TOM, S. a name given to a sequin in several parts of the Grand Seignior's dominions, which has that monarch's stamp on it.

ALTOGE'THER, Adv. [allis, Goth. mid alle aetgaedere, all, and togaedere, Sax. altegader, Belg. of aell, all, and gader, Belg. to join] entirely, without any exception, applied to number and quality. "Man, at his best state, is "altogether vanity." Psalm xxxix. 5. In all respects; perfectly. In Company; without separating; in a body.

ALVEA'RIUM, S. [Lat. from alveus, a channel, and auris, the ear] in Anatomy, that cavity of the outer ear in which the wax is lodged.

ALVE'OLI, S. [Lat. a diminutive of alveus, Lat. a cavity or channel] in Anatomy, the sockets in the jaw-bone which contain the teeth, and are lined with a nervous membrane, wrapping itself about the ends of the teeth, of exquisite sense, and the seat of pain in the tooth-ache.

A'LUM, S. [alumen, Lat.] a kind of mineral salt, of an acid taste. See Allum.

ALU'MINOUS, Adj. [from alumen, Lat.] that which resembles allum in its properties, or consists of allum.

A'LUM-STONE, S. [from alum and stone] a stone, or calx, of a corrosive nature, used to consume the fungous excrescencies, or proud flesh, of wounds.

A'LWAYS, Adv. [altnæga, Sax. alwoy, Belg.] applied to actions, without ceasing or intermission; continually: "I have set the "Lord always before me." Psalm xvi. 8. Constantly, or during the whole course of a man's life: perpetually, applied to time.

A. M. an abbreviation, before the date of the year, for anno mundi, or the year of the world; and, after the name of a person, for artium magister, or, master of arts.

AM, Verb. Sub. [of eom, eam, and am, Sax. the first person of beon, Sax. to be, or exist] when used singly, it implies existence: Following what, it implies nature: "Know-"ing what I am." Prior. Applied to place, it signifies presence: "Where I am, there shall "my servants be." John xii. 26. Applied to truths, it implies affirmation: "Jesus said, I "am the bread of life." John vi. 35. When repeated, it implies self and independent existence, or a being which is the uncreated source of the existence of all other beings.

AMA'DABAT, AMAN'DABAT, AMA'DAVER, or ARMADA'BAT, S. a large trading and strong city, the capital of Cambaia, a province of the Mogul in the East Indies, delightfully situated in a plain, watered by the river Sambretty; has twelve gates, is surrounded with walls built of stone and brick, and flanked with towers forty feet high, and fifteen thick. It is one of the four cities which the Mogul honours with his court, and has twenty-five large towns, besides 2998 villages, under its jurisdiction. The little river rendering the country impassable for the four rainy months, the poor natives swim it by means of bladders, or bags made of goat skins. Lat. 23 deg. 40 min. N. Long. 72 deg. 12 min. E.

AMARA'NTH, S. [amaranthus, from a, Gr. negative, and μαραινω, Gr. to wither; becauſe the flowers when cropped do not wither, but retain their colour for ſome time after] in Botany, amaranth, or flower-gentle. It has male and female flowers in the ſame plant, having no petals, but with an empalement of three or five pointed leaves. There are fourteen ſpecies; the firſt whereof, when full blown, is very beautiful, and no ſmall ornament to the flower garden. In Poetry, it is uſed for an imaginary flower, which never fades, "Immortal amaranth!" Par. Loſt. In Dying, a colour which inclines to purple, a ſpecies of red, ſo called, becauſe it reſembles that of the flower juſt deſcribed.

AMARA'NTHINE, Adj. [from amaranth and en, Sax.] that which is compoſed of amaranth. "Amaranthine bow'rs." Pope.

To AMA'SS, V. A. [amaſſer, Fr.] to gather together, ſo as to form a maſs, or heap. "To amaſs riches." Atterb. Figuratively, to lay up, or ſtore in the memory, with great aſſiduity, and little diſcretion. To collect together in great quantities.

AMA'ZINGLY, Adv. [from amazing, and ly of lic, or lice, Sax.] in a manner capable of exciting aſtoniſhment, wonder, or admiration; prodigiouſly; ſurprizingly.

A'MAZON, S. [from a, Gr. negative, and μαζος, a beaſt] one of thoſe women, who compoſed the nation ſo called, who are ſuppoſed to have dwelt near the river Thermodoon, on the Black-ſea. They are reported to have compoſed a nation of themſelves, excluſive of males, and to have derived their name from their cutting off one of their breaſts, that it might not hinder the exerciſe of their arms, and likewiſe that it might add, according to Hippocrates, ſtrength to that ſide which ſuffered the amputation. However, it muſt be ſaid, that the reality of ſuch a nation has been very warmly diſputed both by ancients and moderns. With reſpect to ourſelves, we beg leave to communicate our opinion in thoſe words of Sir Roger de Coverly in the Spectator. "That much may be ſaid on both ſides." This term is likewiſe given to a celebrated river, called likewiſe the Maragnon in America. It received its firſt name, i. e. the River of the Amazons, from the uſual cuſtom of the women attending their huſbands to war, either to animate them by their words, or aſſiſt them by their preſence; as was common in the early ages, not only among the Gauls, but likewiſe among ourſelves in England. This famous river begins at the foot of the Cordilleras, and falls into the Atlantic ocean; from the ſpring head to its mouth it runs eight or nine hundred leagues in a direct line, but allowing for its winding, it cannot be leſs than eleven or twelve hundred leagues, or about three thouſand Engliſh miles.

AMBA'GES, S. [Lat. from αμφι, Gr. about, and ago, Lat. to lead] a round about way of expreſſion; expreſſion; a method of relating any ſubject, wherein the narrative is not conducted directly to the point. Circumlocutions.

AMBASSA'DE, S. [ambaſſade, Fr.] the office of a perſon, who is commiſſioned to negotiate the affairs of a ſtate in foreign parts.

AMBA'SSADOR, S. [ambaſſadeur, Fr. embaxador, Span.] a perſon ſent by a prince or ſtate into that of a foreign one, as their repreſentative, to tranſact ſuch affairs as concern the public. Their perſons have always been eſteemed inviolable: and, by the Civil Law, their moveables, eſpecially ſuch as are deem d an acceſſion to their perſon, cannot be ſeized on, either as a pledge, or payment of a debt, by order of execution or judgment, or by leave of the ſtate wherein they reſide. In a ſecondary ſenſe, it implies any perſon ſent on a meſſage, even by a private perſon; a meſſenger.

AMBA'SSADRESS, S. [ambaſſadrice, Fr.] in its primitive ſenſe, the wife, or lady, of an ambaſſador; in a ſecondary one, a woman ſent on a meſſage.

AMBA'SSAGE, S. [ambaſſage, Fr.] the employ, or office of a perſon acting as an ambaſſador.

A'MBE, S. [Gr. a commander] in Surgery, the name of an inſtrument made uſe of for reducing diſlocated bones, that is, ſuch as are out of joint.

A'MBER, S. [ambre, Fr. ambra, It.] a kind of gum, or roſin, found in the Baltic, on the coaſt of Pruſſia; there is ſcarce any ſubject which has occaſioned more debate among the naturaliſts than this. And as moſt of their ſentiments, though warmly eſpouſed, are rather vague gueſſes than even probable truths; it is no wonder, that the origin of this ſubſtance, ſhould remain a myſtery even to this preſent time. The phyſical qualities of this ſubſtance have recommended it in fumigation to remove defluxions, and in powder as an alterative, abſorbent, ſweetner, aſtringent, lithontriptic, diuretic, &c.

A'MBER, Adj. that which is made of amber. "Amber bracelets, beads, and all "his knavery." Shakſp. That which is of a yellow colour, and tranſparent, reſembling amber in thoſe reſpects. "All your clear "amber drink is flat." Bac.

A'MBERGRIS, S. [from amber and gris, grey. Ambra-grigia, Ital.] a fragrant drug, of a ſuety ſubſtance, not ponderous, of an aſh colour, variegated like marble, ſometimes marked with white ſpecks, and melts like wax. The naturaliſts ſeem much divided in their ſentiments on the origin of this ſubſtance. It is uſed by confectioners and perfumers, in order to ſcent their commodities, and is recommended by phyſicians as proper to raiſe the ſpirits, and accelerate their motions.

A'MBER-SEED, S. called likewiſe muſk-ſeed; is produced from a plant, both in the Antilles and in Egypt. In a good ſoil it grows ſix or ſeven feet high, if it be near ſome tree to ſupport it. The ſeed reſembles millet, is cordial, and gives the breath an agreable ſcent after eating.

A'MBER-TREE, S. [from amber and tree] by Botaniſts, ſtiled frutex Africanus ambram ſpirans, or the African ſhrub, exhaling an odour reſembling amber. Its chief beauty is its ſmall ever-green leaves, which, when rubbed between the hands, emit a fragrance reſembling amber.

AME'RICA, S. [from AMERICUS VESPUSIO, a Spaniard, ſent, in 1497, to improve the diſcoveries made by Columbus] one of the four quarters of the world, by far the largeſt, the laſt diſcovered, and the richeſt. Its extent is ſo vaſt, that notwithſtanding the centuries which have elapſed ſince its firſt diſcovery, its boundaries have never been properly determined; what has hitherto been diſcovered reaches from lat. 78 deg. N. to lat. 56 deg. S. i. e. 134 deg. which taken in a ſtraight line amount to above 8040 miles in length; with regard to its breadth it is very irregular, being in ſome places 3690 miles, and, in others, not above 60 or 70 miles over: this vaſt country was buried from all the reſt of the world, till 1492, when the enterpriſing genius of a Columbus drew aſide the veil of ignorance, and ſhewed it to the ſurpriſed inhabitants of the old world. The honour of this great diſcovery has been claimed by almoſt all the maritime nations in Europe; the Spaniards tell us, that Columbus received his lights from the papers of captain Aldres, their countryman, who had been caſt on the coaſts; and the French again, that he had them from Betincourt, who firſt diſcovered the Azores; not to determine a conteſt, which would rather occaſion laughter, than knowledge, we muſt add, that our claim to the diſcovery of this New World is prior to that of the Spaniards, whoſe pretenſions ſeem to be the beſt grounded: no one can diſpute the authenticity of thoſe vouchers, whereby it appears that John Cabot, a Venetian, a man no leſs enterpriſing, or leſs ſkilled in navigation, than Columbus himſelf, was ſent by Hen. VII. in 1496, a year before the diſcovery of Columbus, who firſt diſcovered Newfoundland, and ſailing along the coaſt went as far as Florida. We muſt not omit that the Welch claim a more antient diſcovery, than any yet produced; aſſerting, that prince Madoc, ſon of Owen Gwineth, was caſt on the coaſt of Florida, as early as 1170, or 1190. Though indeed ſome look on this relation as fabulous, yet it has a great many corroborating circumſtances, that make it appear not at all improbable. For Meredith ap Rheiſe, who gives us the account, was prior to Columbus, and died in the year 1477, which is fifteen years before Columbus began his expedition; to this we may add, the affinity between the language of the Welch and ſome of the ſettlements in theſe parts; the evidence of Mr. Davis, who tells us he met with a whole ſettlement, which ſpake the Welch language in its utmoſt purity, and the tradition of ſome of the inhabitants, who aſſert, that their anceſtors came from a country beyond the great waters, nearly about the ſame time, from the ſame point of the compaſs, or from the riſing of the ſun. To enumerate all the products of this great continent, would ſwell this volume far beyond its preſcribed limits. Let it ſuffice to hint, that moſt nations, who have any concerns in this part of the globe, are taught by experience, that they, who promote the trade of their plantations, in due ſubſerviency to the intereſt of their mother-country, are likely to have the greateſt ſhare of mercantile ſhipping, can boaſt the beſt nurſery for ſeamen, enjoy an inexhauſtible fund of riches, and will always be able to maintain the fovereignty of the ſeas. If this be the caſe, how can we ſufficiently applaud the great regard our preſent adminiſtration has had to theſe parts in the preſent war? What noble proſpects muſt our victories there open to the eyes of an admiring people? And how muſt our wonder ceaſe at the preſent ſinking and deplorable ſtate of the French finances, when we conſider, that we have by conqueſt precluded thoſe ſupplies, which they uſed to draw from their colonies?

A'MERSHAM, S. [Agmundeſham, Sax. of agmunder and ham, Sax. a market town; or of ac, an oak, munda, a defence, and ham, Sax. a town; i. e. a town ſheltered from the winds by oaks] a ſmall market town, which went by its Saxon name Agmondeſham, as late as the reign of Henry VII. It is governed by two burgeſſes, has a handſome market-houſe, town-hall, free ſchool; two fairs, one on Whit-Monday, the other on the 29th of September, moſtly for ſheep: it ſends two members to parliament, though no corporation, and is twelve miles S. E. of Aylesbury.

AME'SBURY, A'MBRESBURY, A'MBLESBURY, or A'MBRSEBURY, S. [from Ambroſe and burig, a town] a very old market town in Wiltſhire, which derived its name from Ambrius, who founded a monaſtery for Benedictines in this place, or rather from Aurelius Ambroſe, a Britiſh prince. To deſcribe the nunnery built here by Ælfritha, wife of king Edgar, the expulſion of the nuns in 1177, on account of the incontinence of the abbeſs, &c. the revival of its credit in 1285, when king Edward's I. daughter, Mary, and thirty young ladies of diſtinction, belonged to it; and Q. Eleanor's adding ſtill greater dignity to it by her retirement, might be tedious: yet we muſt mention that the duke of Queenſbury has a ſeat here built by Inigo Jones; that the town was burnt down about the year 1750, but revived with greater ſplendor. It drives but little trade, has two fairs, one on the longeſt and the other on the ſhorteſt day of the year. Its vicarage is in the gift of the canons of Windſor, and its diſtance from London eighty miles.

ANA'CREON, S. [Gr. from ἀνα and κρεων, Gr. to reign] a Greek poet, born at Teios, a town of Ionia, who flouriſhed when Polycrates reigned at Samos, and Hypparchus at Athens. As a writer, he was a perſon of an elegant taſte; his poems have a gaiety that charms, and an eaſineſs which ſteals away our praiſe; though his ſubjects are trifling, they would extort a ſmile from the ſullen cheek of auſterity, and make the eye of gaiety ſparkle with joy. His death is very remarkable, ſuppoſed to have been owing to a grape ſtone, which ſtuck in his throat, and choaked him in the 85th year of his age.

ANACREO'NTIC, Adj. [from anacreon] that which is written in the taſte of Anacreon.

ANADIPLO'SIS, S. [Gr. ἀναδίπλωσις, Gr. of ἀνα, Gr. again, and διπλόω, Gr. to double] in Rhetoric, a figure, wherein the word, which ends one ſentence or verſe, begins another.

ANAGO'GICAL, Adj. [from ἀνω, upwards, Gr. and ἀγω, Gr. to lead] applied to Scripture, thoſe parts which relate to eternity, or the life to come.

ANALE'CTA, S. [Gr. plural, from ανα, Gr. and λεγω, Gr. to collect] a collection of ſmall and detached pieces; a miſcellany.

ANALE'MMA, S. [Gr. αναλημμα, from αναλαμβανω, Gr. to reſume] an orthographic projection of the ſphere on the plane of the meridian, by ſtrait lines and ellipſes; wherein the eye is ſuppoſed to be at an infinite diſtance, and in the E. or W. points of the horizon. Likewiſe a mathematical inſtrument, with the ſphere projected on it, and a moveable horizon and index, by which ſeveral problems relating to the ſphere may be ſolved, without the trouble of a calculation.

ANALE'PTIC, Adj. [αναλεπτικος, Gr. from αναλαμβανω, Gr. to reſtore] in Phyſic, medicines proper to reſtore the body when emaciated, either by the long continuance of diſorder, or want of food. "Analeptic medi- "cines cheriſh the nerves." Quincy.

ANALO'GICAL, [from analogy] applied to words, a term, which ſignifies any particular idea is attributed to ſeveral others, not by way of reſemblance, but on account of ſome evident reference to the original idea. "Thus a ſound "or healthy pulſe, a ſound digeſtion, ſound "ſleep, are analogical words, becauſe they have "reference to a ſound and healthy conſtitu- "tion." Watts. That which has a reſemblance in ſome reſpects, though different in others.

ANALO'GICALLY, Adv. [from analogical and ly of lic, or lice, Sax.] in a manner wherein there is ſome reſemblance to the thing compared, though it may not hold good with reſpect to all its properties; defined by Johnſon in an analogical manner.

ANALO'GICALNESS, S. [from analogical and neſs, of nes, neſſe, nyſſe, Sax. or NS, Goth.] the reſemblance which one thing bears to another, ſo as to ground an analogy or ſimilitude between them.

ANA'LOGISM, S. [αναλογισμος, of ανα, Gr. and λογος, Gr. reaſon] in Logic, in argument drawn from the cauſe to the effect, and importing an unanſwerable neceſſity.

To ANA'LOGIZE, V. A. [from analogy] to turn into an analogy; to form a reſemblance, or run a parallel between things which differ; to interpret a thing as if it had a reference or reſemblance to ſomething elſe.

ANA'LOGOUS, Adj. [from analogy] that which bears a reſemblance to a thing in ſome particulars, but not in all.

ANA'LOGY, S. [from αναλογια, Gr.] a reſemblance which one thing bears to another, in ſome of its properties or qualities, though not in all; when we ſpeak of the divine Being, we are obliged to have recourſe to this method of expreſſing ourſelves, becauſe divine matters are not the objects of our ſenſes, and cannot be conceived any other ways than by their ſimilitude, proportion, or connection with ſenſible things; ſo that analogy means a reſemblance in kind or ſort, but a difference with reſpect to manner.

ANA'LYSIS, S. [αναλυσις, Gr. from ανα, Gr. and λυω, to diſſolve, or break in pieces] in its primary ſenſe, a ſeparation or ſolution of a compound body into the parts of which it conſiſts. "The analyſis of the dew of any "place." Arbuthn. In philoſophy, the conſidering the different parts of a thing ſeparately, and drawing concluſions from the experiments made on them in that ſtate. "Analyſis con- "ſiſts in making experiments and obſerva- "tions." Newt. Opt. The reſolving of a thing into its conſtituent parts, as of a ſentence into ſingle words; of words into ſyllables; of ſyllables into letters; of a tune into its ſingle notes; of an argument into its ſeveral propoſitions; and of a book into the ſeveral heads, or topics, of which it treats. In Mathematics, it implies the diſcovering of the truth or falſhood of a propoſition. Analyſis, in Chemiſtry, is the reſolution of any ſubſtance into its firſt principles, with an intention to diſcover what it conſiſts of.

ANALY'TIC, Adj. [αναλυτικος, Gr.] the reſolving a thing into its primary, elemental or conſtituent parts; the reducing a book into the ſeveral topics which it treats of; the arguing on the principles or conceſſions of an opponent, till he is reduced to a dilemma.

ANALY'TICAL, Adj. [from analyſis] that which pretends to reſolve things into their firſt principles.

ANALY'TICALLY, Adv. [from analitical and ly of lic, or lice, Sax.] in ſuch a manner as to ſeparate a thing into the parts of which it is compoſed, to reſolve a ſubſtance into its firſt principles.

To ANALY'ZE, V. A. [αναλυω, Gr.] in Chemiſtry, to reſolve a compound into its firſt principles. "To analyze them, and take a- "ſunder their heterogeneous parts." Boyle. To inveſtigate, or trace a thing in its firſt principles or motives.

ANALY'ZER, S. [from analyze and er, implying an agent, from *wæ*r, Sax. or wair, Goth. a man] that which can reduce a thing into its firſt principles.

ANAMORPHO'SIS, S. [from ανα, Gr. and μορφωσις, a configuration, of μορφη, Gr. a ſhape] in Perſpective, the deſcribing a figure, which in one point of view ſhall appear to be deformed, and monſtrouſly miſhapen, but in another regular, and in due proportion; or a delineation of an object which ſhall appear monſtrous to the naked eye, but when viewed in a cylindrical mirror, ſhall appear regular and harmonious; there are ſeveral pieces of this kind in the Aſhmolean Muſeum at Oxford.

ANA'NAS, S. in Botany, the pine-apple, ſo called from its reſemblance to the cones of pines. All authors, who ſpeak of it, call it the king of fruits; it grows on a ſtem a foot high, ſurrounded with fifteen or ſixteen leaves, ſhaped like thoſe of the aloe plant.

ANA'PHORA, S. [Gr. αναφορα, a repetition] a figure in rhetorick, wherein ſeveral ſentences begin with the ſame word; of which the following Pſalm affords a beautiful and noble example. "The voice of the Lord is "powerful; the voice of the Lord is full of "majeſty; the voice of the Lord breaketh the "cedars of Lebanon," &c. Pſal. xxix. 3.

ANAPLERO'TIC, S. [ἀναπληρόω, Gr. to fill up] in Medicine, that which incarns, or fills up any wound with fleſh.

ANA'RCHICAL, Adj. [from anarchy] that which is not ſubject to rule, laws, or government; rebellious; or ſeditious. "In this "anarchical and rebellious ſtate of human na-"ture." Cheyne.

A'NARCHY, S. [ἀναρχία, Gr. anarchia Lat.] a ſtate wherein there is not, or no one will acknowledge, a ſupreme magiſtrate; a ſtate wherein people are without the enforcement of laws, and will not ſubmit to them; rebellion; ſedition; and confuſion.

ANASA'RCA, S. [from ἀνὰ, Gr. and σὰρξ, fleſh] in Phyſic, a kind of univerſal dropſy, wherein the ſkin appears bloated, and yields to the impreſſion like dough.

ANASA'RCOUS, Adj. [from anaſarca] that which has the properties of an anaſarca.

ANASTOMO'SIS, S. [Gr. from ἀνὰ, through, and στόμα, Gr. a mouth] in Anatomy, the inoſculations, or opening of two veſſels into each other.

ANA'STROPHE, S. [from ἀνὰ, and στρέφω, Gr. to turn] in Rhetoric, diſpoſition, or placing of words, wherein they do not follow the grammatical conſtruction, and thoſe which ſhould follow are placed firſt; as Italiam contra, for contra Italiam, in Virgil. Notes angelical, for "Angelical notes," in Milton.

ANA'THEMA, S. [from ἀνὰ, and τίθημι, Gr. to place, or ſeparate, called in the Hebrew חרם cherem, Heb.] among the Jews it ſignified; Firſt, Something dedicated to the ſervice of the Deity; Secondly, Something devoted to deſtruction, as the city of Jericho was, Joſh. vi. 17. Thirdly, A perſon who was the object of univerſal averſion; and Fourthly, One who, on account of ſome offence, was denied the privileges of ſociety, and baniſhed from the ſynagogue. The term implies not only the curſe, or act of excommunication, but the perſon excommunicated or curſed likewiſe.

ANATHEMA'TICALLY, Adv. [from anathematical, and ly of lic, or lice, Sax.] in the manner or form of an anathema, or ſentence of excommunication.

To ANATHE'MATIZE, V. A. [from anathema] to pronounce the ſentence of excommunication againſt any perſon, whereby he is cut off from the church as a member, and deprived of all the privileges of ſociety.

ANATO'MICAL, Adj. [from anatomy] that which is uſed in anatomy to ſeparate the parts of an animal, or ſubſtance to be diſſected. That which is diſcovered by anatomy, or in the diſſection of a body. That which is ſeparated, applied to the ſmall and conſtituent particles of a body.

ANA'TOMIST, S. [anatomiſte, Fr.] one who diſſects the body of human creatures, brutes, or plants; dividing every one of the parts from each other; enquiring into their ſeveral uſes and properties; their various affections; the wonder of their ſtructure, &c.

To ANA'TOMIZE, V. A. [from ἀνὰ, Gr. and τέμνω, Gr. to cut] in its primary ſenſe, to diſſect, or ſeparate, by means of inſtruments, every part of the body, ſo as to be fully acquainted with whatever concerns its form or conſtruction. In a ſecondary ſenſe, to diſcover all the properties of a truth or thing; to lay open the ſecret motives, affections or diſpoſition of a perſon's mind. "Should I ana-"tomize him to thee as he is, I muſt bluſh "and weep." Shakeſp.

ANA'TOMY, S. [ἀνατομία, Gr. See Anatomize] the diſſecting, or ſeparating the parts of a human, or vegetable body, in order to diſcover its ſtructure, and the different uſes of its ſeveral parts. After a long diſuſe, this art revived in the ſixteenth century; prior to which, the diſſection of a human body was looked upon as ſacrilege; nay, even to this very day, the uſe of anatomy and ſkeletons is forbidden in Muſcovy; the firſt, as inconſiſtent with humanity; and the ſecond, as ſubſervient to witchraft. Applied in a humorous manner to a perſon who has little fleſh on his bones; one who is emaciated by diſeaſe or labour, ſo as to reſemble a ſkeleton. "A hungary, lean-faced "villain—A meer anatomy." Shakeſp.

A'SHY, Adj. [from aſh] reſembling the aſh in colour, or of a whitiſh grey.

ASIA, S. [Lat.] one of the four general quarters into which the terraqueous globe is commonly divided; and it is in all reſpects allowed to be by far the moſt conſiderable part of the whole world: for here God planted the garden of Eden, in which he placed the firſt man and woman, Adam and Eve, from whom the reſt of mankind were to ſpring. After the deſtruction of the world by the flood, Aſia became the nurſery from which Noah's deſcendants diſſeminated various colonies into all the other parts of the globe. In Aſia was the delightful ghtful Canaan, where God planted his favourite nation the Hebrews. Here it was that the ſtupendous work of our redemption was accompliſhed by his divine Son Jeſus Chriſt: hence the benign light of the goſpel was carried by his diſciples and followers into all nations, diffuſing itſelf into the remoteſt parts; here the foundation of the firſt Chriſtian churches were laid, the firſt councils held, the firſt biſhopricks erected, and the Chriſtian faith miraculouſly founded and promulgated, being alſo ſtained with the blood of numerous martyrs, who gave a noble teſtimony to it. From hence, by an early communication with Egypt by philoſophers, now reputed the mother of learning, all arts and ſciences were ſecondarily derived. In Aſia it was that not only the firſt edifices and cities were raiſed, but likewiſe where the firſt kingdoms and monarchies were founded. For, here in particular, after the deluge, the empire of the Aſſyrians was begun by Belus or Ninus, and continued to Sardanapalus; then it paſſed to the Medes by Arbaces to Aſtyages; next to the Perſians under Cyrus, till Darius; and after him it came to the Greeks and Macedonians by Alexander the Great: when after his death it was ſplit into numberleſs ſovereignties among his captains; and theſe in a little time were deſtroyed by the Romans. In Aſia, the Parthians alſo eſtabliſhed a very powerful empire, which ended under the emperor Alexander Severus; and it paſſed again to the Perſians, till it was deſtroyed by the Turks and Saracens. But about the year 1515 it flouriſhed again under Iſmael. Thus Aſia was the ſeat of flouriſhing kingdoms, whilſt the other parts of the world were inhabited, if at all, ſo far as we know, only by wild beaſts. Beſides theſe advantages above-mentioned, this part of the world exceeds the other three (namely, Europe, Africa, and America), if not in the largeneſs of its territories, particularly with regard to the laſt of theſe; yet in the richneſs of its ſoil, ſerenity of its air, ſalubrity of its drugs, deliciouſneſs of its fruits, fragrancy and balſamic quality of its plants, ſpices, and gums; in the quantity, variety, beauty, and value of its precious ſtones; the fineneſs of its ſilks and cottons; the richneſs of its metals and minerals, with many more advantages of the like nature. It muſt indeed be owned, that ſince the Turks, thoſe enemies to learning, politeneſs and liberty, have become maſters of ſo large a part of Aſia, its ancient ſplendor has been quite eclipſed, and the moſt fruitful ſpot in all Aſia become an uncultivated deſert; and ſince that æra it has been only conſiderable for the rich commodities it yields, and on account of which it is ſtill reſorted to by merchants of other nations. But ſuch parts as have eſcaped the Turkiſh barbarity are ſtill in a flouriſhing condition; and that, in a great meaſure, more from the natural fertility of the ſoil, than the induſtry of the inhabitants, who are deſervedly blamed for their indolence, luxury, and effeminacy. Theſe bad qualities are principally to be aſcribed to the warmth of their climate; though perhaps not a little heightened by cuſtom and education, and conſequently are more or leſs prevalent, according to the near or farther diſtance from the North; for it is plain that the ſouthern climates do not produce perſons of ſuch robuſt conſtitutions as the northern. Yet hence we may infer, that thoſe Aſiatics, who live under the ſame latitude with us, cannot be much inferior to us in this reſpect: at leaſt ſeveral among them, particularly the Turks and Tartars, are men of as much ſtrength and courage as any are. With regard to the more ſouthern inhabitants of Aſia, what they want in robuſtneſs of body is in a great meaſure compenſated by the vivacity of their mind, and in their ingenuity in ſeveral kinds of workmanſhip, which our ableſt mechanics have in vain attempted to imitate. All the Aſiatic nations having been always kept in abject ſlavery by their princes, have never had an opportunity of diſplaying their love of liberty, which, no doubt, is as natural to them as to the reſt of mankind. And hence they have no idea of any other form of government than a deſpotic monarchy, which is the only one that reigns through all the parts of that vaſt country. In religion they are no leſs ſtupid and ignorant, a great part of Aſia being over-run with Mahometaniſm, as Turkey, Arabia, part of Tartary, and India. In Perſia, and the Great Mogul's country, they profeſs the ſame religion; but are of the ſect of Hali, who differ in ſome points from the Turks; though both acknowledge Mahomet as their prophet, and the Alcoran as the divine rule of faith and life: which diverſity ariſes from the various interpretations given by their commentators to the tenets in the laſt-mentioned book. In the other parts of Tartary, in China, Japan, Siam, &c. they are generally Pagans, uſing the moſt extravagant rites and ſuperſtitious ceremonies in the worſhip of their deities, of which they have a great multiplicity. It has been hinted above, that Aſia was the theatre for the firſt publication of Chriſtianity, which was propagated with ſuch amazing celerity and ſucceſs, that even in the apoſtolic age it had penetrated as far as India, if not farther, being every-where received and profeſſed. But the unworthy deportment of theſe converts, and their ſhameful proneneſs to error and corruption, occaſioned that denunciation revealed to St. John in Rev. ii. 5. So that the churches of Aſia Minor were abandoned to perſecution, and at length utterly deſtroyed by the inundation of northern barbarians, as the Saracens, Tartars, and Turks. And though the light of the goſpel could never be totally extinguiſhed, but great numbers of Chriſtians continued ſtill faithful to it in moſt parts of Aſia; yet they have been always kept under ſuch ſervile ſubjection, and even now ſo oppreſſed, that their condition is rather a ſtate of miſery than toleration. But it is now time to deſcribe the limits of Aſia. It is ſeparated from Europe by the Archipelago, the ſtreights of Caffa, the lake Mœotis, the river Don in Ruſſia, and a line drawn from that to the river Obi. It is divided from Africa by the Red-ſea, and bounded on the W. by the Black and and Mediterranean ſeas; on the S. and E. by the Arabic, Perſian, Indian, and Chineſe ſeas; and on the N. by the Frozen ocean, or White ſea. And thus it is every-where encompaſſed by the ſea, the limits northward not having been diſcovered till the reign of the late Czar Peter, the Great, by whoſe orders a ſurvey was made; from which a map of Ruſſia was afterwards printed at Amſterdam: according to which this northern ocean begins a little beyond lat. 70, extending eaſtward from Groenland along the coaſts of Muſcovy, Siberia, &c. till it joins with the Oriental or Japan ſea. But how far it reaches northward is not yet known. The extent of Aſia from the Helleſpont to the city of Malacca, the fartheſt part of India, in the Levant ſea, is computed to be about 4000 miles nearly, from eaſt to weſt, that is, from the Archipelago to the Chineſe ocean, upwards of 5000; and from N. to S. i. e. from Malacca to the Tartarian ocean, about 4600. Moll ſays upwards of 6000.

ASI'DE, Adv. [from a and ſide] applied to ſituation, that which is not ſtraight. Oppoſed to perpendicular, out of, or deviating from, its true direction; not directly towards; or from the company.

ATTRA'CT, S. [from the verb, or rather from attrait, Fr.] that which has the power of alluring, engaging the affection, or attracting. "Attracts and flames." Hudib.

ATTRA'CTICAL, Adj. [from attract] that which hath the power of drawing ſomething towards it.

ATTRA'CTION, S. [from attraction, Fr.] in Mechanics, the act of a moving power, by which a thing that may be moved is brought nearer, or drawn towards it. In Ancient Philoſophy, a natural power ſuppoſed to be inherent in certain bodies, by which they acted on others at a diſtance, and drew them towards them. In the Newtonian ſyſtem, it is an indefinite principle, not implying a particular manner nor phyſical cauſe of action, but only a tendency of approaching, whether it proceed from any external cauſe, or be inherent in bodies themſelves, excluding the idea of impulſe from its conſideration. It is divided into the attraction of gravity, or the attraction of cohefion. The attraction of gravity, called the centripetal force by mathematicians, is that by which all bodies tend towards the center, or act on each other at a diſtance; from hence proceed almoſt all the motions and changes in the ſyſtem; it is by this principle that light bodies aſcend, that projectiles are regulated in their courſes, the vapours aſcend, and the rain falls; the waves roll, the air preſſes, and the ſea is ſwelled or decreaſed by the viciſſitude of its flux and reflux. The attraction of cohefion, is that which unites the inſenſible particles of bodies together into their different maſſes, and cauſes the roundneſs we ſee in drops of water or quickſilver. Figuratively, the power of alluring, enticing, or engaging the affections of a perſon.

BA'CKWARDLY, Adv. [from backward, and ly] applied to the motion whereby a perſon retreats or goes from another with his face towards him; in a perverſe, unwilling manner; reluctantly.

BA'CKWARDNESS, S. [from backward and neſs] that quality which proceeds from a diſlike of the meaſures a perſon is to put in practice, the undertaking he is to accompliſh, or the perſon he is to oblige, including the idea of ſlowneſs.

BA'CON, S. [from Bacown, Brit.] the fleſh of a hog ſalted and dried, having the briſtles burnt with ſtraw. To ſave one's bacon is a low phraſe for preſerving one's ſelf from hurt or miſchief.

BA'CON, [ROGER] a learned Engliſh monk, of the Franciſcan order, who flouriſhed in the thirteenth century, was born near Ilcheſter in Somerſetſhire, in the year 1214, deſcended of an honourable family, and, in the very firſt dawnings of his genius, attracted the favour and patronage of the greateſt lovers of learning. He was perfect maſter of Greek, Latin, and Hebrew, and in all branches of the mathematics. He was a ſecond Archimedes; he underſtood the whole ſcience of optics; was admirably ſkilled in geography, aſtronomy, chronology and chemiſtry; was the inventor of gunpowder; was far from a novice in phyſic, logic, metaphyſics, ethics, and made all his ſtudies have a reference to one great ſyſtem, and all tending to confirm his knowledge of divinity, ſo that he well deſerved the title given him, of Doctor Admirabilis, or the Wonderful Doctor, is the glory of our iſland, and was the morning ſtar, which went before the ſun of knowledge, the great Sir Iſaac Newton.

BA'CON [FRANCIS] the glory and ornament of his age and nation, was ſon of Sir Nicholas Bacon, lord keeper of the great ſeal, and of Ann, daughter of Sir Anthony Cook, tutor to Edward VI. He was born at York-houſe, in 1651, and gave ſuch early proofs of an extraordinary genius, that his converſation was courted by perſons of the higheſt rank, when a boy; and ſo much was queen Elizabeth charmed with the ſolidity of his ſenſe, that ſhe would often call him her young lord keeper. Her majeſty once aſking him how old he was, he returned this witty and complimentary anſwer, that he was two years younger than her majeſty's happy reign. On his return from the univerſity, his father ſent him to France, to improve under that honeſt and able miniſter Sir Amias Paulet, ambaſſador at Paris. Here he ſo gained the confidence of that miniſter as to be ſent by him him on a commiſſion of great importance to the queen, which he executed with ſo much judgment, as procured to himſelf, and the ambaſſador, great credit. At nineteen years of age, he wrote a ſuccinct view of the ſtate of Europe at that time. His father dying while he was abroad, and leaving him but a very ſlender fortune, he applied himſelf to the ſtudy of the law, and for that purpoſe entered himſelf in the ſociety of Gray's-Inn; but not confining himſelf entirely to law, but indulging his extenſive genius to a free contemplation of the whole circle of ſcience, he framed the plan of that great philoſopical work, which will not only render him immortal, but do honour to his country. After diſcharging the office of reader of Gray's Inn, in 1588, in the 26th year of his age, the queen appointed him her counſel learned in the law extraordinary. He wrote ſeveral treatiſes on law ſubjects; in all which he gave evident proofs of his great abilities. He likewiſe diſtinguiſhed himſelf in the houſe of commons, where his ſentiments were ſo approved, that tho' he generally ſpoke on the ſide of the court, he was always looked upon as a friend to the people. After the deceaſe of the queen, he compoſed a memorial of the happineſs of her reign, which did equal honour to her adminiſtration, and the capacity of its author. He applied very early to her ſucceſſor K. James I, with a tender of his ſervice, which was kindly received. On the 23d of July, 1603, he was introduced to the king at Whitehall, and received the honour of knighthood. In 1604, he conſtituted him, by patent, one of his counſel learned in the law, with a fee of 40l. a year. He granted him likewiſe a penſion of 60l. a year, for ſpecial ſervices received from his brother and himſelf. In 1605, he publiſhed the firſt ſpecimen of his great work, in his book of the Advancement of Learning. The king employed him to prevail with the parliament to agree to an union between the two kingdoms, and he laboured this point with great diligence, but without effect. He married Alice, daughter of Benedict Barnham, Eſq; an alderman of London, with an ample fortune, but he never had any children by her. Soon after, he was appointed ſolicitor. In this ſtation, he was very ſerviceable in expediting matters in parliament, agreeable to his maſter's deſire. Amidſt ſo many arduous affairs of ſtate, he found leiſure to proſecute his philoſophic ſtudies, and in ſome meaſure digeſted the plan of his great work, which he tranſmitted to his friends, in order to have their free ſentiments upon the ſubject; by which means he was enabled to finiſh thoſe parts of his Inſtauration to ſo high a degree of perfection. He publiſhed, in 1610, his celebrated treatiſe of the Wiſdom of the Antients, in which he ſhewed that none had ſtudied them more cloſely, was better acquainted with their beauties, or had pierced deeper into their meaning. In 1611, he procured the office of judge of the marſhals court, jointly with Sir Thomas Vavaſor. On Sir Henry Hobart's being made chief juſtice of the Common Pleas, Sir Francis ſucceeded him in his place of attorney-general, in 1613. His credit at this time was ſo great with the king, that his majeſty depended chiefly on his integrity and abilities in the moſt difficult affairs of ſtate; particularly in healing the breach between the two courts of King's Bench and Chancery, which by the haughtineſs of chief juſtice Coke, had been greatly widened. After he had occupied this office three years, he was advanced to that of lord keeper of the great ſeal, in the room of chancellor Egerton. In the year 1618, Sir Francis had the title given him of lord high chancellor of England; and in the ſame year was created baron of Verulam. Tho' he had now buſineſs ſufficient to engroſs the greateſt part of his time, he did not neglect his philoſophic ſtudies; for in 1620, he ſent his maſter the moſt perfect and important work that ever fell from his pen, his Novum Organum. Soon after, his lordſhip was raiſed to the dignity of a viſcount, by the ſtyle and title of viſcount St. Albans in the county of Hertford. He was now arrived at the higheſt honours, when ſeveral complaints of bribery and corruption againſt him were laid before the parliament, and they being ſupported by evidence, as well as by his own confeſſion and ſubmiſſion, he was fined 40,000 l. impriſoned in the Tower, during the king's pleaſure, rendered incapable of holding any employment in the ſtate, of ever ſitting in parliament, or coming within the verge of the court. Thus fell this great man from the very ſumit of dignity and honour, and in his fall had nothing left him but his bare titles, which were ſaved by the tenderneſs of the biſhops. After a ſhort confinement in the Tower, he was diſcharged, and ſoon after had other indulgencies granted him by the king, who at length ſigned a warrant for his pardon. Theſe favours ſettling the mind, and raiſing the ſpirits of his lordſhip, he applied himſelf again to his ſtudies with vigour, and the next year publiſhed his Hiſtory of King Henry VII. However, his debts bore hard upon him; for tho' he had a penſion from the crown of 1200 l. a year; his grant from the alienation office was 600l. a year; and his own eſtate 700l. per annum; his debts amounted to 30,000 l. which was a loud enough to depreſs him. He did not ſuffer his misfortunes or diſappointments to hurry his thoughts to the prejudice of his ſtudies. An inſtance of which will always do honour to his memory, reported by Dr. Rawley. One day his lordſhip was dictating to that doctor ſome of his experiments in his Sylva. The ſame day he had ſent a friend to court, to receive for him a final anſwer, touching the effect of a grant which had been made him by king James. His friend returning, told him plainly, that he muſt thenceforth deſpair of that grant, how much ſoever his fortune needed it. Be it ſo, ſaid his lordſhip, and then diſmiſſed his friend very chearfully; and coming directly to Dr. Rawley, ſaid to him, Well, Sir, yon buſineſs won't go on, let us go on with this in our power, and then dictated to him a-freſh for ſome hours, without any any discernible interruption of thought. A new parliament being called in 1623, he employed his pen on political subjects, so much to the satisfaction of the king, that he granted him a full pardon, which was one of the last acts of his government; in virtue of which his lordship was summoned to the second parliament in the next reign, though his infirmities would not permit him to attend. Being sensible his end drew nigh, he prepared himself for it. By his will he committed several of his Latin and philosophical compositions to the care of Sir William Boswel, his majesty's agent in Holland, where they were afterwards published by Gruter. His orations and letters he commended to Sir Humphry May, chancellor of the duchy, and to the bishop of Lincoln, the letters, to be preserved. By this judicious care, most of his papers have been handed down to posterity, and collected into volumes. The severe winter which followed the infectious summer of 1625, brought him very low; but the spring reviving his spirits, he made a little excursion into the country, in order to try some experiments in Natural Philosophy. Being taken ill on the way, he was obliged to stay at the earl of Arundel's at Highgate, about a week, and there expired, on the 9th of April, 1626, in the 66th year of his age, and was privately buried in the chapel of St. Michael's church, within the province of Old Verulam.

BALTIC SEA, [in Latin Mare Balthicum] It is properly a large bay of the German ocean, between Denmark, Germany, Pruſſia, Courland, Ruſſia, and Sweden. The German name of Oſt-ſea, or Eaſt-ſea, ſeems to have been given by it the Dutch, it lying to the E. of Holland. In the Baltic is neither ebb nor flow; yet it is obſerved, that the natural current of its waters goes towards the Sound; but this may be hindered by a N. W. wind of any long continuance, which alſo drives large volumes of water into the Baltic out of the German ocean; whence the obſervable riſing of the waters is cauſed in its harbours. When the N. wind blows, the water of this ſea, which is otherwiſe ſalt, becomes pretty freſh, and in ſome meaſure may be uſed for culinary purpoſes; but in general it is not very ſalt, on account of the great number of rivers that fall into it. The greateſt depth of water in the Baltic hardly exceeds fifty fathoms. M. Andrew Celſus demonſtrates, in the Swediſh acts, vol. v. p. 25. that the water in the Baltic decreaſes; and, according to his calculation, it has fallen forty-five geometrical inches in 100 years. The waves here are not ſo high, nor ſo long as they are in the north ſea; but fall ſhorter, quicker, and more numerous one upon another. The fiſhery in the Baltic is conſiderable; particularly that of the ſtreamer-fiſh, the beſt ſort of which is called waſbuck. When the ſea is tempeſtuous and violently agitated, it throws upon the coaſts of Pruſſia and Courland, eſpecially on the former, the ſo much celebrated amber. You paſs out of the German ocean into the Baltic through theſe three ſtreights; namely, the Oerſund, the Great and the Little Belt: the firſt ſtreight lies between Seeland and the province of Schonen, in Sweden; the ſecond between Funen and Seeland; and the third between Jutland and Funen. In winter the Baltic is commonly frozen for three or four months; by which its navigation is interrupted all that time.

BATA'VIA, the capital of all the Dutch ſettlements in the Eaſt Indies, and center of their commerce in Aſia. It is ſituated on the N. E. part of the iſland of Java, S. E. of Sumatra, and S. W. of Borneo. Here is the reſidence of their governor-general, and council of the Indies. It has a moſt excellent harbour belonging to it. The Dutch at Batavia can now fit out ſo many ſhips, that no European nation at that diſtance can cope with them; ſo powerful are they, and ſo numerous are the ſubjects and dominions dependent upon them. When they firſt came hither, which was in the year 1619, the place was only a village, in a flat country, with fenny grounds round it; but they have ſince made it a very beautiful city, built of white ſtone, having cut canals faced with ſtone, on the borders of which are evergreens planted, running all along the principal ſtreets; ſo that the water of land floods is carried off. About 17 or 18 ſmall iſlands in the offing ſo break the violence of the winds and waves, that 1000 ſail may ride ſafe there at a time, beſides ſmall craft, which go into the river, and lie cloſe in-ſhore faſtened to piles. Two large piers run out about half a mile into the ſea, between which 100 ſlaves are conſtantly employed in taking up the mud and ſoil from the town, otherwiſe it would ſoon be choaked up. Croſs the river, below the town, is a boom, which is ſhut up every night, and well-guarded. Here all veſſels pay toll. A ſea-gale riſes every morning about ten, to bring veſſels into the bat, and a land one about ten at night, to carry them out. The one comes from the N. and the other from the S.

BA'TH, S. [bath, Sax. from bathian, Sax. to waſh] a ſufficient quantity of water collected into ſome convenient place for perſons to waſh in. Baths are divided into hot and cold. The moſt celebrated of this kind in England are thoſe near Wells, in Somerſetſhire. They produce a perſpiration of 5 oz. in an hour, and are of great uſe in diſorders of the head, palſy, diſeaſes of the ſkin, ſcurvy, ſtone, conſtipations of the bowels, and moſt chronical diſorders. Cold bathing operates both by its cold and conſtringing power, and its weight, which, at the depth of two feet under water, preſſes on the human frame with a weight of 2280 lb. troy. It diſſolves the blood, removes any viſcid matter adhering to the ſides of the veſſel; generates ſpirits; forces urine; and removes obſtructions in the viſcera. Knights of the bath, ſo called from their being uſed to bathe formely before their creation, ſeem to have been inſtituted by Richard II. extended by Henry IV. and revived by George I.

BA'TH, S. a city in Somerſetſhire. It is ſituated on a plain not very large, and ſurrounded by hills of an equal height, from which ſeveral ſprings, highly beneficial to the town, take their riſe. The waters of theſe ſprings ſprings are an effectual remedy to ſuch bodies as peccant humours have rendered dull and heavy. The ſtrength of the humour is abated, the patient being thrown into a ſweat by their heat. The three moſt noted of theſe baths are called, the croſs bath, the hot bath, and the king's or royal bath. Bath has been a flouriſhing place, both for the woollen manufacture, and the great reſort of ſtrangers. Its antiquity is evident, from ſome Roman images and inſcriptions; but the letters of theſe have been ſo worn by time, that they are ſcarce legible.

BEDFORDSHIRE, one of the counties of England. It is bounded on the S. and S. E. by Hertfordſhire; on the N. and N. E. by the ſhires of Huntington and Cambridge; on the N. W. by Northamptonſhire, and on the W. by Buckinghamſhire. It is twenty-two miles long, not quite fifteen broad. It contains 323 ſquare miles, nine hundreds, ten market-towns, and and 124 parishes, all in the diocese of Lincoln. The air of this county is mild and salubrious; the soil is a deep clay, and abounds in corn and pasture in the northern parts, but sandy in the middle, especially from Woburn to Potton, with a ridge of hills, covered with woods. Its rivers are the Ouse and the Ivell. After the former is entered the county, between Bradfield and Turvey from Bucks, its course is so winding, that before it comes to St. Neots in Huntingdonshire, but eight miles distant, it runs upwards of thirty miles. It divides the county into two unequal parts; the northern, which is the smallest, is most woody; but the southern has wide fields, yielding plenty of white and strong barley, which, made into malt, is sent to London or Hertfordshire, besides vast quantities of wheat. In this county are very few manufactures, except those of straw hats, and bone-lace. Its forests and parks are well stock'd with deer, and other game. Its fat pastures abounding with cattle, produce great quantities of butter and cheese. Here is fullers earth, with wood for dying, and plenty of poultry. It only sends four members to parliament, two of which are for Bedford town, which gives its name to the county, which has no city in it, nor the six circumjacent ones.

BE'LL, S. [bell, Sax.] a popular machine, or vessel, ranked by musicians among the instruments of percussion; made of a compound metal of tin and copper, or pewter or copper, in the proportion of 20 lb. of pewter, or 23 lb. of tin, to 100 cwt. of copper; hung in steeples of churches and in houses. The parts of a bell may be divided into the barrel or body; the clapper, which occasions it to sound by striking it, and the ear, or cannon, by which it is hung. Its sound arises from a vibratory motion of its parts, like that of a musical chord; for the stroke of the clapper changing its circumference from a round to a spherical form, which by elasticity endeavouring to recover its former shape, undergoes alternate changes of figure, and by that means gives a tremulous motion to the air, in which sound consists. Those of the Egyptians are made of wood. The Turks have a very great aversion to bells, and prohibit Christians the use of them in Constantinople, pretending that the sound of them would be troublesome to the souls of the departed. To bear the bell, is to suppress others, or to be the first in merit. To shake the bells; to be in motion. "If Warwick shakes his "bells." Shakesp.

BISCAY, or BISCAYA, or VIZCAY, S. [in Latin, Cantabria] one of the provinces belonging to Spain. It is bounded on the W. by the principality of Aſturias; on the N. by the Mediterranean, which here is called the Biſcayan or Cantabrian ſea, the Bay of Biſcay, or ſimply by us the Bay; on the E. by French Lower Navarre, and Spaniſh Navarre; and towards the S. by Old Caſtile. Its extent from S. to N. is from five to twenty miles, and from W. to E. about twenty-nine; though the Geographical Syſtem makes both theſe dimenſions vaſtly larger. The air here is fine and temperate, as in the other provinces of Spain; the ſoil is uneven and ſtony. In ſome places hardly any thing grows; but in others they have a little wine called chacolino, which is pleaſant, and drank here as ſmall-beer, and what grain is neceſſary for the ſubſiſtence of the inhabitants: but throughout the province great quantities of apples are produced, of which they make fine cyder, that ſupplies the want of good wine. Until the year 859 the Biſcayans were governed by counts or governors, ſent them by the kings of Oviedo and Leon. About which time they revolted, and choſe themſelves a lord; which they retained till Peter the Terrible reduced them, and united Biſcay, under the title of a lordſhip, with Caſtile; which ſtill continues. This province includes the three following ſubdiviſions; namely, Biſcay Proper, Guipuſcoa, and Alaba.

By being well watered, it is rendered fruitful, and by lying a little above the tropic of Cancer, it is a temperate climate. Though Topia be a mountainous barren part, yet moſt of the country is pleaſant, abounding with all kinds of proviſions; and, though it be an inland-country, and has no communication with the ſea, yet the inhabitants are very rich, not only in corn, cattle, &c. but likewiſe in ſilver mines and ſome of lead; with which laſt, the author of the Geographical Syſtem ſays, they refine their ſugar. The natives being warlike, have not yet been wholly reduced. Between the mines of Zacatecas and thoſe of this country, they have four large towns, ſituated in moraſſes; and conſequently difficult of acceſs.

BLACK-SEA, [Mare Nigrum, Lat.] the modern name of the Pontus Euxinus, or Euxine-ſea. It lies between Europe and Aſia; and, as far as it goes, is their common boundary. It might be more properly called a large lake, if it did not communicate with the Mediterranean, by the Thracian Boſphorus. The Turks call it Cara Denghis. It is ſaid to be 3800 Engliſh miles in circuit. On account of the dreadful ſtorms which rage more furiouſly here than in any other ſea, it has had the name of the Black or Terrible-ſea: though at the ſame time it appears, that theſe frightful ideas were formed of it before navigation had arrived at the perfection it is now brought to; yet it has been found, from later experience, that the tempeſts on this ſea are very violent and dangerous, from the ſea itſelf being incloſed almoſt on every ſide, and the waves beating circularly upon the veſſels that ſail thereon. Beſides, the danger is increaſed, as on its coaſts are no good harbours; eſpecially towards the S. where the Turks navigate for the moſt part. The ſouthern banks appear ſomething black, by reaſon of the large woods growing every-where on the coaſts.

BLA'CKSMITH, S. [from black and ſmith] a perſon who forges the larger works in iron, and derives his name from their colour, which is generally black, from their not being poliſhed; oppoſed to a white-ſmith, who forges the ſmaller works, which are generally poliſhed.

It formerly included Lusatia, till it was granted by the house of Austria to the electoral house of Saxony. And the greatest part of this kingdom was taken in the year 1741 by the king of Prussia; who still possesses Silesia, it having been since ceded to him by the queen of Hungary. Bohemia being an inland country, and remote from the sea, the cold is more intense here than in some other places under the same latitude; and yet the air is not healthy, especially between Bohemia Proper and Moravia, and towards the S. and E. parts of Bohemia, on account of woods and mountains, though it lies more open to the N. and W. Its principal rivers are, the Elbe, Muldaw, Egra, Oder, Vistula, Moraw, Teyn, and Igla. Its revenues are reckoned at about 1,400,000 l. communibus annis.

To BO'IL, V. N. [bouiller, Fr.] to be violently agitated with heat; to have its particles set into a violent motion by fire, and so to be able to scald any thing immersed in it, applied to water. Figuratively, hot; to move with a violent motion, like that of boiling water; to be placed in boiling water; to dress victuals by boiling. To boil over, applied to water, or other fluids, to have its contents so rarefied by heat, as to take up larger dimenſions than before, and to run over the ſides of a veſſel.

BO'IL, S. See Bile.

BO'ILARY, S. [from boil] a place where ſalt is boiled.

BO'ILER, S. [from boil and er] one who boils any thing; a veſſel in which a thing is boiled.

BO'ILING, S. [in Phyſics] the particles of fuel paſſing the pores of the veſſel, mix with the liquid, and meeting with a reſiſtance there ſufficient to deſtroy their motion, they communicate it to the water; hence ariſes a ſmall inteſtine motion in the particles of that fluid; but the firſt cauſe ſtill continuing, that motion is increaſed till the agitation of the water becomes ſenſible: but now the particles of fire, continually ſtriking on thoſe at the loweſt ſurface of the water, will impel them, both by its impulſe and by their own rarefaction, upwards, during which the particles at the upper ſurface muſt, by their own ſpecific gravity, be deſcending towards the bottom; which will eaſily account for the upper ſurface of water's being ſooner hot at the top than at the bottom, and a perſon's being able to move a veſſel of boiling water by putting his hand on the bottom, without receiving any hurt. The air thus diminiſhing the ſpecific gravity of water, ſo as to make it mount not only in water, but likewiſe air, we hence are enabled to account for the ſteam or ſmoak. The particles of air dilated and expanded thus by heat, moving upwards, will meet and coaleſce in their aſcent, by which means great quantities of water will riſe and fall alternately, or in other words the water will boil; but the heat continuing and the rarefaction increaſing, the water will now be too much for the veſſel to contain, and will conſequently ſwell over its ſides, which the vulgar call boiling over. It muſt however be added, that when water boils it cannot be rendered hotter by any degree of fire whatever; for as the heat of boiling water is in proportion to the preſſure of the atmoſphere upon its ſurface, while that preſſure remains the ſame, the heat will be the ſame likewiſe; and the thermometer, being immerſed in boiling water, will, by the degree of heat it expreſſes, diſcover the preſſure of the atmoſphere.

BOI'STEROUS, S. [byſtry, Pol. rapid, vehement, or furious, byſter, Belg.] violent, furious, vehement or ſtormy. Roaring, applied to the wind. Figuratively, furious, warm, hot, outrageous. Applied to perſons, violent.

BOMBA'ST, Adj. [from the noun] pompous, ſonorous, but conveying mean, if any, ideas.

BOMBA'Y, an iſland belonging to the peninſula of India, within the Ganges, and Mogul empire, in Aſia. It has its name from the goodneſs of its harbour, which is capable of containing 1000 ſhips. In the year 1663 the king of Portugal transferred the property and ſovereignty of this iſland, with all its appendant members and iſlands, to king Charles II. as part of the infanta Catharine's portion, upon her marriage with him, who afterwards made a preſent of it to the Engliſh Eaſt India company; and they have ever ſince been in poſſeſſion of it, only the French took it in the laſt war; but it was ranſomed for a very large ſum. The preſident of the Engliſh factory at Surat is commonly the governor of Bombay, who is attended with his guards, and other enſigns of ſovereignty, like a prince. This iſland is about ſeven miles in length, and twenty in circuit, being inhabited by Engliſh, Portugueſe, and people of different nations from the neighbouring countries, as Pagans, Mahometans, and a ſort of Chriſtians called Coolys, moſtly fiſhermen: ſo that the number of ſouls on it now is ſaid to be above 60,000. The iſland is not able to ſupply all theſe with proviſions, the ſoil being barren, the climate unhealthy, and air putrid: but governor Bohun, by draining the ſwamps and bogs, has remedied this latter inconveniency: however, the neighbouring country brings them abundant ſupplies. The iſland has woods of cocoa, and ſome ſalt; and lies convenient for trade.

BRI'STOL, S. [called in Welch Caer Odor Nant Badon, the city Odera, in the valley of Badon. It was likewiſe named Caer Erito, and Brigbſtrow, Sax. a famous place] a city on the rivers Avon and Frome; though ſituated partly in Glouceſterſhire and partly in Somerſetſhire, yet it belongs to neither, having diſtinct magiſtrates of its own, and being a county incorporate by itſelf. For populouſneſs, riches, and the extenſiveneſs of its trade, it is undoubtedly the third city in England. Their call for glaſs bottles is ſo great, that they conſtantly employ fifteen large houſes in making them; which is owing, among other particulars, to the large export of the medicinal hotwell waters of St. Vincent. The precious ſtones or cryſtals which are gathered in vaſt quantities on the rock St. Vincent, and are found in the bowels of red flints on an oppoſite rock, are another great advantage to this city. The tranſparency and water of theſe ſtones are ſo very good, that they want nothing to recommend them, but hardneſs and rarity, the two only qualities qualities in which they differ from diamonds. This city is governed by a mayor, aldermen, two ſheriffs, a recorder, &c. is well ſupplied with all ſorts of proviſions, has markets on Wedneſday and Saturday, and ſeveral fairs in the year, which are frequented by people from almoſt all the trading places in the kingdom. W. of Plymouth county, another ſubdiviſion of this colony. Of the ſame name is the largeſt and moſt populous, though not the oldeſt, town of the county, which has a convenient harbour, with Rhode-iſland lying at the entrance of it: and, next to Boſton, has the beſt trade in New England, and is continually increaſing both in that reſpect and in the number of its inhabitants. Near Briſtol is a remarkable hill called Mount-Hope, where Phillip, ſtyled King of the Wamponoags, who made war on the Engliſh in King Charles II's reign, had his reſidence, as he afterwards met his fate and quietus at the bottom of it, when driven back thither by the Engliſh.

BRISTOL, New, the principal town belonging to Buckingham county, in Penſylvania, in North America. It is ſituated twenty miles N. of Philadelphia, on the river Delawar, oppoſite to Burlington or Bridlington, in Weſt New Jerſey, and contains between ſeventy and eighty houſes. BR'IT, S. in Natural Hiſtory, a ſalt water fiſh.

BR'ITAIN, Great, S. [ſuppoſed by Cambden to be derived from brith, Brit. painted, on account of the firſt inhabitants painting their bodies; and by others from brydio, Brit. to grow boiſtrous or tumultuous, applied to the ſea; and as the Britiſh ſeas were always notorious for their boiſtrouſneſs, and the word brydio communicates this idea ſo adequately, the conjecture ſeems ſomewhat ſpecious; and brydaweth, ſignifying anger or warmth, from the ſame root, leads us eaſily to brydain, in Sax. Brytaine, or, as wrote by moderns, Britain] in Geography, an iſland, the largeſt in Europe, of a triangular form, bounded on the W. by the Iriſh ſea, on the N. by the northern ocean, on the E. by the German ocean, and on the S. by the Britiſh channel, the narroweſt part of which is called the Streights of Dover. The ſea, thus ſurrounding it, is not only a ſecurity againſt an enemy but likewiſe greatly abates the violent colds the climate would otherwiſe be expoſed to, the continual motion of the ſea ſending in a kindly vapour which molifies the natural ſharpneſs of the air, ſo that in ſome parts of France and Italy, the winter is as ſevere as ours in Britain. The fertility of the ſoil is, in a great meaſure, owing to the ſame cauſe, by furniſhing us with gentle ſhowers in their proper ſeaſons. To enumerate the products and manufactures of this iſland would exceed our limits, eſpecially as they will be ſpecified in our account of the different counties and moſt remarkable places; but we ſhall in general ſay that it yields all the neceſſaries and many of the conveniencies of life, and the induſtry of the inhabitants, and their application to trade, ſupply it with the riches and luxuries of the known world. It has on all ſides very convenient harbours, and a great many navigable rivers; the moſt conſiderable of the latter are the Thames, the Severn, and the Humber, in England; the Clyde, Forth, Tay, &c. in Scotland, which carry along with them into the ſea vaſt numbers of leſſer ſtreams. Its length, is 587 miles; and its breadth 285, according to Moll. It lies between 50 and 60 degrees N. latitude, and between 9 and 17 degrees W. longitude, Teneriffe being the firſt meridian.

BRITAIN, New, or Terra Labrador, and Eſkimaux, according to ſeveral authors. It is ſituated in North America, having Hudſon's bay and ſtreight on the N. and W. Canada and the river St. Lawrence on the S. and the Atlantic ocean on the E. It is ſubject to Great Britain, but yields only ſkins and furs. Moll has an iſland under the name of New Britain, which Dampier ſailed round. It lies forty miles to the eaſtward of the eaſtermoſt part of New Guiney, in the Southern or Antartic countries. It has about 3 deg. 30 min. of lat. in all its extent, the northernmoſt part of it being in lat. 2 deg. 30 min. and the ſouthernmoſt in 6 deg. 30 min. S. It has about 5 deg. 18 min. of long. from E. to W. The weſternmoſt part of the iſland, at the mouth of Dampier's ſtreight, terminates in two remarkable capes, diſtant from each other about ſix or ſeven leagues. The N. W. cape the captain called Cape Glouceſter, and the S. W. point Cape Anne. Within each head are two mountains gradually aſcending from the ſhore. The N. W. mountain he called Mount Glouceſter, but gave no name to the other. This country is generally mountainous, intermixed with large valleys, both which ſeem to be fertile. BU'COLIC, S. [from βουκολεω to feed cattle, or βουκολος, Gr. a herdſman] paſtoral poetry, ſuppoſed to be the moſt ancient ſpecies of poetry, to have had its original in Sicily, amidſt the mirth and diverſions of ſhepherds, to have been inſpired by love, and owing to leiſure. Theocritus, is the moſt famous writer in this ſpecies among the Greeks; but is ſuppoſed to be too coarſe in his expreſſions and ſentiments. Virgil copied him in Latin; but has run into the other extreme of being too polite. Mr. Pope has followed him too cloſe to be looked on as an original, and has copied his politeneſs too nearly not to be involved in the ſame cenſure. Spenſer indeed ſeems to have been as great a maſter in this as in allegorical poetry; his language, his ſentiments, are the exact copies of innocent ſimplicity, and his paſtorals, by keeping a due mean between the coarſe ruſticity of Theocritus, and the elegance of Virgil, have carried this ſpecies of poetry to as high a degree of perfection as can be expected. It would be a piece of injuſtice if Mr. Gay ſhould not be mentioned together with Spenſer, when he poſſeſſes ſo much of his ſpirit, and has ſo agreeably imitated his manner. Phillips has alſo excelled in this ſpecies of writing.

C A

C, The third letter, ſuppoſed by ſome to have been borrowed from the Hebrew ג, inverted thus ɔ, or from the Grecian κ, but as both our language and alphabet ſeem entirely to be formed on the plan of the Anglo-Saxon, we may be allowed to aſſert that it is borrowed from the Ꞇ, which is the third letter of their alphabet as well as ours, has the ſame ſound, and in their ſmall characters was written in the ſame form, as it is at preſent by ourſelves. It is ſounded by expreſſing the breath between the tongue, raiſed to the roof of the mouth near the palate, and the lipe open. Before the vowels a, o, u, and all conſonants, it is pronounced hard, though ſomewhat ſofter than the k, as in cage, cat, cut; but before i, e, and y, it has a ſound like the ſ, but ſomewhat more ſharp, as in cit, cell, cyder; before an h, it has a peculiar ſound, between the hardneſs of the k, and the ſoftneſs of the ſ, as in chain, cheeſe; but in words derived from the French, it is ſounded like an ſ, before h, as in chaiſe, chicane, which are pronounced ſhaize, ſhicane. It has been cuſtomary to add a k to it, when it comes at the end of words, as in logick; but moderns ſeem now to have dropped it as uſeleſs, writing logic, critic, muſic, &c. which is certainly to be commended, not only as being more agreeable to the etymology of words derived from the Latin, but likewiſe confirmed by the practice of the Anglo-Saxons, from whom we have borrowed the beſt part of our language. Uſed as a figure, it ſtands for 100, and when double CC, 200. When placed before a name, it ſignifies Caius, Cæſar, &c. With Roman Lawyers, it ſignified to condemn, from condemno. See A. When double, it ſignified conſuls. In Commerce, it is uſed by merchants to mark their books. In Muſic, it denotes the higheſt part in a thorough baſe.

CA'LENDAR, S. [calendarium, Lat ſo called from the Romans writing calendæ in large characters at the beginning of every month] a table containing the days, months, feſtivals, &c. happening in the year. The Roman calendar, from which ours is borrowed, was compoſed by Romulus, who made the year conſiſt of no more than 304 days; Numa Pompilius corrected his error, by making it conſiſt of twelve lunar months of thirty and twenty-nine days alternately, which made 354 days; but being fond of an odd number, he added one day more, which made it 355 days; and that the civil year might equal the ſun's motion, he added a month every ſecond year. Julius Cæſar, as a farther improvement, made the year conſiſt of 365 days, and left the ſix hours to form a day, at the end of every fourth year, which was added to the month of February. This calendar was called the Julian and the old ſtile, in oppoſition to the new ſtile introduced by Gregory XIII. who finding the Julian gone too forward, cut off ten days from the calendar; and, to remedy this defect for the future, left out one biſſextile day every 100 years, making every fourth hundred a leap year. By act of parliament, to remedy the inconveniences ariſing from the differences of ſtyle, this kingdom adopted the Gregorian, or new ſtyle, by leaving out eleven days of the month of September in the year 1752. Calendar, is likewiſe the name of a machine or hot-preſs, made uſe of to preſs, ſmooth, or water manufactures of ſilk, wool, or linen. His ſiſter, who was maid of honour to the ducheſs of York, recommended him to the duke; who made him one of his pages of honour; and ſoon afterwards preſented him with a pair of colours in the guards. In 1672, the duke of Monmouth gave him a captain's commiſſion in his own regiment, when he ſerved under his Grace, in the Netherlands, againſt the Dutch, who were at variance with Lewis XIV. Here he learned the art of war under that great general marſhal Turenne, and laid hold of every opportunity of ſignalizing himſelf, being a volunteer in all difficult enterprizes. At the ſiege of Maeſtricht the next year, he was the firſt who mounted a breach in a half moon that the Dutch had retaken, and planted the French colours thereon with his own hand. Upon his return to England, king Charles promoted him to be lieutenant colonel of Sir Charles Littleton's regiment of foot. In 1681 he married Sarah, daughter and co-heireſs of Richard Jennings, eſq; of Sandridge, in Hertfordſhire. In 1682 he attended the duke of York into Scotland, when the frigate they were on board running aground, they narrowly eſcaped, 130 ſeamen being loſt. Next year he was created lord Churchill, and baron of Eymouth, in the kingdom of Scotland, and had the command of the third troop of horſe guards given him. Upon the acceſſion of James II, on Feb. 6, 1684-5, he continued him in all his employments, created him baron Churchill of Sandridge, in the county of Hertford, advanced him to a brigadier-general, and ſent him ambaſſador to France, to notify king Charles's death, and his own acceſſion. Upon his return, he was ſent to command the troops in the weſt againſt the duke of Monmouth, who had taken up arms againſt his ſovereign, and greatly contributed to the victory at Sedgmore, which put an end to the rebellion. As he was one of thoſe who had invited the prince of Orange over, he joined him, upon his landing, at Sherborne, excuſing himſelf to the king by letter for this conduct. His highneſs continued him a gentleman of the bedchamber; promoted him to the rank of a lieutenant-general; and in April 1689 he was created earl of Marlborough, in the county of Wilts; and the ſame year he commanded the Engliſh forces in Flanders. Next year he was ſent over to Ireland, and reduced Cork and Kinſale. In 1691 he attended king William all the ſummer in Flanders.

ders. In 1692 he fell into diſgrace (upon what occaſion is not clearly known) and the king diſmiſſed him his ſervice, and ſoon after he was ſent to the Tower, with ſome other peers, upon a falſe accuſation of high treaſon. In 1698 he he was taken into favour again, and appointed governor to the duke of Glouceſter, and ſworn of the privy council. Towards the latter end of the king's reign, he was appointed ambaſſador extraordinary to the States-General, general of foot, and commander in chief of his majeſty's forces in Holland. In 1702, upon the death of the king, he was intruſted with the chief command of the confederate forces, and a ſalary of 10,000 l. per ann. allowed him, when, May 4, war was declared againſt France by Great Britain, the Emperor, and the States-General, though the French did not proclaim till July 3d. As he was paſſing Guelders by water, a party of 35 men, iſſuing from the garriſon, attacked and took the yatcht on board which he was; but, with his uſual preſence of mind, producing a paſs granted to his brother general Churchill, which was long before expired, he was ſuffered to proceed. Upon his return to England, he had the thanks of the parliament for his conduct, and the queen this winter created him marquis of Blandford, and duke of Marlborough, and gave him 5000 l. a year out of the poſt-office for life, to ſupport that dignity. In the campaign of 1703, his grace took Bonne, the uſual reſidence of the elector of Cologne, with Huy and Limbourg. On July 2, 1704, his grace attacked the enemy, who were chiefly Bavarians, ſtrongly intrenched at Schellenberg, and entirely defeated them, driving great numbers of them into the Danube; and next morning he took poſſeſſion of Donawert. On Auguſt 4, at the famous battle of Blenheim, he totally the routed the enemy, and took marſhal Tallard priſoner, whom he afterwards brought with him to England. The loſs of the French in this engagement was computed at 30,000 killed, wounded, and taken priſoners. Upon his arrival in England he not only had the thanks of both houſes of parliament, but the commons addreſſing the queen to perpetuate his memory, her majeſty declared her intention of granting the intereſt of the crown in the manor of Woodſtock, free from all incumbrances, and a bill paſſed both houſes for that purpoſe. In June 1705 his grace raiſed the ſiege of Liege; and the next month retook Huy, and paſſed the enemy's lines, who retreated with ſo much precipitation, that they left 1000 men behind them, who were made priſoners. The emperor, as an acknowlegement of his eminent ſervices, made him an actual grant of the territory of Mundelheim in Swabia. May the 23d, 1706, was fought the memorable battle of Ramellies, in which the enemy had about 8000 killed, and 6000 taken priſoners; but his grace had two horſes killed under him. He paſſed the Dyle the next day, and the ſtates of Brabant immediately ſent their ſubmiſſion to his grace. He arrived in England the latter end of November, and received the thanks of both houſes of parliament; and an act paſſed, December 29, ſettling the honours and dignities of duke of Marlborough upon his poſterity, annexing the manor of Woodſtock and Blenheim-houſe. On July 12, 1708, the duke and prince Eugene beat the French at Oudenard, where the enemy had 4000 killed, 5000 wounded, and 7000 made priſoners; for which the thanks of the houſe of commons were tranſmitted to him while at Bruſſels, and he received thoſe of the lords on his arrival. On Sept. 11, he attacked the French at Malplaquet, and obtained a victory; but with the loſs of a great number of men. In 1710, Doway, Fort Scarpe, Bethune, and ſome other places, were taken. On December 28, he arrived in England; but, the miniſtry being changed, not meeting with the uſual reception, and his ducheſs having incurred the queen's diſpleaſure, he ſurrendered all his places; but her majeſty renewed his commiſſion, and made a diſpoſition of the other generals to his ſatisfaction. In April 1711 his grace joined the army, and on the 10th of Auguſt he inveſted Bouchain, which ſurrendered Sept. 13th, the garriſon being made priſoners of war. This was his laſt military exploit; for he now found himſelf accuſed by the houſe of commons of taking large ſums yearly from the contractors for bread and bread-waggons, which was voted illegal; and that the two and a half per cent. deducted from the foreign troops, ought to be accounted for. This accuſation his grace anſwered. However, the ſpirit of faction running ſtrongly againſt him, on January 1, 1712, he was removed from all his offices of truſt; and finding every attempt made uſe of to render him odious, he wiſely withdrew, and embarked for Oſtend Nov. 30, where, on his arrival, he was ſaluted with a general diſcharge of the cannon, as he was at other places; but returning again to England in 1714, he landed at Dover the very day queen Anne died; and king George reſtored him to all his dignities, though he never more appeared at the head of an army; but retired from buſineſs, ſpending the remainder of his days in the country. He died at Windſor Lodge, June 16, 1722, in the 73d year of his age, and was buried Auguſt 9 with all the pomp due to his great ſervices, in Weſtminſter Abbey, at his majeſty's expence.

To give up one's ſelf to the firſt comers*, is to embrace any doctrine implicitly, and without examination.

CO'MET, S. [cometa, or comctes, Lat. a hairy ſtar, from coma, Lat. a hair] in Aſtronomy, an opaque heavenly body, like the planets, moving in its proper orbit, which is very excentric, having one of its foci in the center of the ſun. It is diſtinguiſhed not only by its orbit, but likewiſe by its appearance from the planets, as being bearded, tailed, and haired; bearded when eaſtward of the ſun, and its light marches before; tailed when weſtward of the ſun, and the train follows it; and haired when diametrically oppoſite to the ſun, having the earth between it, and all its tail hid, excepting a few ſcattered rays. The orbits of comets approaching near to a right line, in ſome parts thereof they go ſo near the ſun, that, according to Sir Iſaac Newton's computation, their heat is 2000 times as great as that of red-hot iron. To this let it be added from the ſame great author, that theſe bodies are ſo far from being ſuch tremendous objects, as they are eſteemed to be by the vulgar, and falſely pretended to be by atheiſts, that their atmoſpheres being dilated, rarified, and diffuſed through the celeſtial regions, may be attracted down to the planets, become mingled with their atmoſpheres, and by that means ſupply the deficiencies which would otherwiſe, by continual exhauſting, affect this and other planets; ſo that their revolutions inſtead of being looked on as the harbingers of terror and calamity, ſhould rather be eſteemed a friendly and benevolent viſit, wherein they beſtow ſuch preſents to every planet they paſs by, as is requiſite to prevent its decay, and ſupply its inhabitants with ſuch things as are neceſſary to their exiſtence.

COMETA'RIUM, S. [Lat.] a mathematical machine, repreſenting the method of a comet's revolution.

CONSTANTI'NOPLE, S. the ancient Bizantium, by the Turks called Iſtambol. It is the capital of Romania, in European Turkey, and now the reſidence of the Grand Signio It has its name from the firſt Chriſtian emperor Conſtantine, who, in 330, made it the ſeat of the Roman empire in the E. and it continued ſo till 1453, when the Turks took it after a fifty-four years ſiege; ſince which time it has been the ſeat of their empire. Like old Rome, it ſtands on ſeven hills; hence ſometimes called New Rome. It is moſt delightfully ſituated, in the form of a triangle; on one ſide of which is the main land, and on the other two the ſea; for on the S. is the ſea of Marmora and the Helleſpont; on the E. is the outlet of the Black Sea; and on the S. is the very large and commodious harbour, formed by a canal from the Streights, reaching inland towards the N. W. The fortifications on the land-ſide are antique and ruinous. The appearance of the city, when viewed out of it, is like that of an amphitheatre, but in it the proſpect is much hurt. The city is uncommonly large, has twenty-two gates, of which ſix are towards the land ſide, and ſixteen towards the ſea, but with extremely narrow, ſlippery and ſteep ſtreets. The houſes are moſtly of wood and mortar, and low built, but full of inhabitants. The genteeleſt houſes are in thoſe places where there is not ſuch a concourſe of people, and where the city is leaſt inhabited; and the moſt conſiderable buildings are without the city, upon the harbour. The Imperial palace, or ſeraglio, which ſtands in the city, on the point of the triangle, towards the canal and harbour, together with the gardens, takes up about a mile and a half in circuit: it is rather a collection of ſeveral palaces and apartments, joined together, according to the fancy of the different emperors, than an uniform ſtructure. It is covered with lead, as are all the other palaces of the Sultan. Its principle entrance is of marble, and called the Porte (in Turkiſh Capi) whence the denomination of the Ottoman Porte is given to the Turkiſh empire. In the firſt court is the infirmary and mint; in the ſecond is the divan, or great council-chamber, together with the kitchen, treaſury, and ſtables; and contiguous to the divan, towards the N. is what is properly called the Seraglio: through a covered gallery, one enters into the emperor's magnificent chamber of audience, where the throne ſtands: thus far ambaſſadors are allowed to come, but ſtrangers muſt go no farther into the ſeraglio. Between the two moſques of Sultan Solyman, and Bajazet, is the old imperial ſeraglio, where the wives of the deceaſed emperor are ſhut up. The palaces of the preſent Turkiſh nobility have nothing remarkable on the outſide, but within they are richly and elegantly decorated. Among the moſques, that of St. Sophia, once the metropolitan church of the Chriſtians, is the moſt magnificent, and ſtands oppoſite to the main entrance of the imperial palace. This was formerly not only highly prized by Chriſtians, but is ſo now likewiſe by the Turks, to which the Sultan reſorts every Friday. It was built by the emperor Juſtinian, having extenſive domes or cupolas. Its pavement, walls, and galleries, are covered with marble; here are alſo great numbers of pillars of the ſame materials, likewiſe of porphyry and Egyptian granate. It is ſaid to have every day an income of 10,000 guilders, and it can quite commodiouſly hold 100,000 perſons at once. Round it are chapels that ſerve for burying-places to the imperial family. Beſides this are ſeveral other beautiful moſques. Here the Greeks have thirty churches, the Armenians alſo ſeveral, the Catholics have ſome few, and the Swediſh ambaſſador is allowed a Lutheran church.

COW'LEY, [Abraham] one of the beſt poets of the 17th century, was born near the end of Chancery lane, in Fleet-ſtreet, London, in 1618. His father was a grocer, and died before he was born; his mother, by the intereſt of friends, procured him to be admitted a king's ſcholar at Weſtminſter ſchool. Even here his genius dawned with promiſing rays, ſince in his 16th year, he publiſhed a collection of verſes called Poetical Bloſſoms; 'tis remarked of him that he never could remember, even at ſchool, the common rules of grammar, but ſupplied that defect by an intimate acquaintance with books. He was entered at Trinity college, Cambridge, whence, notwithſtanding the purity of his morals, and the fame of his abilities, he was ejected in 1643, and immediately retired to St. John's college, Oxford. His talents were ſo great for public buſineſs, that they introduced him to an intimate acquaintance with the royal family, occaſioned his going to France with the Q. mother, and his being ſent back again in order to give intelligence of the affairs of the kingdom; a charge he performed with ſo much ſecreſy and addreſs, that he eluded all diſcovery! On the re-eſtabliſhment of the royal family, he retired from buſineſs, and living in a private manner, exerciſed the great talents he poſſeſſed, on ſubjects worthy of the pen of a man, and the thoughts of a CHRISTIAN. Tho' bleſt with great talents, he poſſeſſed no leſs modeſty; though employed in the moſt dangerous affairs, he acquitted himſelf with addreſs and eaſe, and was accompliſhed with all manner of abilities adapted to the greateſt employs. As a poet, he is ſuppoſed to have had rather too much, than too little wit; to have not been curious enough in the choice of his words, or in the harmony of his numbers; but for ſublimity of thought, variety of ſtyle, or fertility of invention, no one ever ſurpaſſed him; he was no leſs admired for his compoſitions in Latin than thoſe in Engliſh, and when he died at Chertſey, in 1667, deſerved the ſtately reſpect which perſons of the higheſt quality paid him by attending him to the grave, and truly merited that noble character king Charles beſtowed on him; "That he had not left a better man "behind him in England!"

CRO'MWELL, [OLIVER] was the ſon of Mr Robert Cromwell, ſecond ſon of Sir Henry Cromwell, of Hinchenbrooke in the county of Huntingdon, by Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Richard Stewart, of the iſle of Ely, knight. He was born in the ancient borough of Huntingdon, April the 24th, or 25th, 1599. He was ſent to the free-ſchool at Huntingdon, and from thence to Sidney College, Cambridge, where he was admitted April 23, 1616; but here his tutor, Mr. Richard Howlet, diſcovered his genius was fitter for action than ſpeculation. Upon the death of his father, he returned home, and was ſoon after placed in Lincoln's-inn, where wine, women, and gaming, engroſſed his attention more than the ſtudy of the law. Theſe ſoon diſſipated all that his father had left him; but perceiving the conſequences of theſe follies, he ſuddenly renounced them, and contracted an intimate friendſhip with ſeveral eminent divines, who looked upon him as a man of great abilities. As he was related to ſeveral conſiderable families, who were deſirous of ſeeing him ſettled, they propoſed his marrying Elizabeth, daughter of Sir James Bouchier, of Eſſex, a woman of parts, and a conſiderable portion, which took effect. His uncle Sir Thomas Stewart dying, left him 4 or 500 l. a year, upon which he removed to the iſle of Ely, where he firſt began to affect the notions of the ſect then ſtiled Puritans. He procured a ſeat in the houſe of commons, in the third parliament of Charles I. and was of the committee for religion, where he diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his zeal againſt popery, and by complaining of the biſhop of Winchester, for licenſing books of a dangerous tendency. After the diſſolution of the parliament, he returned to the country, where by his ſhew for religion, and entertaining ſilenced miniſters, he again greatly impaired his fortune, to repair which, he took a farm at St. Ives; but this ſcheme reduced him more. He, however, ſtill continued to have prayers morning and evening, and gave public notice that he was ready to make reſtitution of any money he had formerly won at play, and actually did return to Mr. Calton, 30 l. which he had won ſeveral years before. The duke of Bedford, and ſeveral others of diſtinction, who had eſtates in Lincolnſhire, propoſing to have the fens drained, Cromwell warmly oppoſed it; which gave occaſion to Mr. Hampden, to recommend him to his friends as a perſon capable of conducting great things, and he had the addreſs to get himſelf choſen for Cambridge, a place in which he was not known, and zealouſly promoted the remonſtrance that was carried on Nov. 14, 1641, which brought on the civil war. In 1642, Cromwell raiſed a troop of horſe, by virtue of a commiſſion from the earl of Eſſex, and acted ſo vigorouſly, that he was promoted to a colonel, and had 1000 horſe under him, and was ſome time after raiſed to lieutenant-general of horſe. On July 3, 1644, at the battle of Marſtonmoor, the victory was chiefly owing to the conduct of his cavalry. When the parliament ſat, Cromwell and his friends carried the ſelf-denying ordinance that excluded the members of either houſe from having any command in the army, but he found means to get himſelf firſt occaſionally, and then abſolutely exempted. Upon the introduction of the new model, as it was called, the chief command of the army was given to Sir Thomas Fairfax, and Cromwell, from being a lieutenant-general of horſe, became lieutenant-general of the army, of which he ſeems to have had the whole direction, while another had the title. The earl of Eſſex dying ſuddenly, in 1646, Cromwell meditated the overturning the conſtitution, by making the army the ſupreme power, which he effected, by turning out thoſe members of the houſe who would not act by his direction, and to complete his deſign, brought his ſovereign to the block, Jan. 30, 1649. Cromwell commanded the forces in Ireland, with the title of lord-lieutenant, and in the ſpace of a few months, viz. by the month of June 1650, had in a manner reduced all Ireland. He then returned to England, leaving Ireton his deputy, and on the 26th of the ſame month, was appointed commander in chief of all the forces of the commonwealth. He immediately marched againſt the Scots, who had received Charles II. and on Sept. 3, 1651, totally defeated the king's forces at Worceſter. April 19, 1653, he called a council of officers, to deliberate about the government, but while they were ſitting, colonel Ingoldby came and informed them that the parliament had framed a bill to continue themſelves till Nov. 5 next year, propoſing to fill up the houſe by new elections, whereupon Cromwell immediately marched to Weſtminſter, with about 300 men, placed them about the houſe, and entered firſt himſelf; but after conferring with them ſome time, he ordered the ſoldiers to ſee the houſe cleared of all the members, and having cauſed the doors to be locked, went to Whitehall. On the 16th of December, Cromwell was inveſted in the court of chancery in Weſtminſter-hall, with great ſolemnity, with the title of Protector of the commonwealth wealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, in the 54th year of his age. He immediately applied himſelf to ſettling public affairs, and concluded a peace with Holland, in which Denmark was included; he alſo made peace with Sweden, and both France and Spain were ſo eager for his friendſhip, that they became ridiculous. As to domeſtic affairs, he appointed judges for the courts at Weſtminſter, profeſſed an unalterable reſolution of allowing liberty of conſcience, and diſmiſſed from their commands ſuch officers as he could not confide in: the command of the forces in Scotland, he beſtowed on general Monk, and ſent his own ſon Henry, to govern Ireland. By an ordinance April 12, 1654, he united England and Scotland, fixing the number of repreſentatives for the latter at thirty, and ſoon after did the ſame by Ireland, and in one inſtance ſhewed a great regard for juſtice, by cauſing the brother of the Portugueſe ambaſſador to be executed for murder. Cromwell called a parliament to meet on the 3d of Sept. which was accordingly opened on that day, and to which the protector went in great ſtate. He received the houſe of commons in the Painted Chamber, and made a very long ſpeech. After returning to the houſe, and chooſing Mr. Lenthall ſpeaker, they began to debate whether the legiſlative power ſhould be in a ſingle perſon, or in the parliament. This ſo alarmed the protector, that on the 12th of the ſame month, he cauſed a guard to be ſet on the Painted Chamber, after ſummoning the members to attend him there, where he gave them a ſharp reproof, and ſuffered none to enter the houſe afterwards before they had taken an oath to be faithful to him and his government; but finding, however, that they were not ready in granting money, he diſſolved them. The duke of Holſtein having preſented the protector with a ſet of Frieſland horſes, he attempted to drive his ſecretary Thurloe, round Hyde-park in his coach, drawn by theſe horſes, but they proving ungovernable, threw him from the coach-box, and in the fall one of his pocket piſtols went off, but without his receiving any hurt. This year 1655, ſome conſpiracies having been diſcovered, ſeveral perſons ſuffered death, and the protector took occaſion from thence, to ſupport his authority by the moſt arbitrary meaſures. He had formed a deſign of making himſelf maſter of great part of the Spaniſh Weſt Indies, and in the ſpring of this year, a powerful fleet was ſent out for that purpoſe, under the command of admiral Peq, and a great body of land forces under general Venables; and tho' they failed in the main deſign, they took Jamaica, which, joined with admiral Blakes feats in the Mediterranean, raiſed the protector's reputation very high abroad. On Sept. 17, 1656, the parliament met, but none were ſuffered to take their places till they had ſwallowed ſuch oaths as were prepared for them, by which about 100 were excluded. In this parliament an act for annulling the king's title, another for the ſecurity of his highneſs, and ſeveral money bills were paſſed. In the ſpring 1657, a kind of legiſlative government was brought upon the carpet, and the title of king was offered to the protector; but he finding it was diſagreeable to many of his friends, refuſed accepting it, ſaying, it was contrary to his conſcience: however, he reſolved on a new inauguration, which was performed with great ſolemnity and ſplendor, in Weſtminſter-hall, on the 26th of June, 1656. On January 20, 1658, the commons met, as did the other houſe, but the two houſes diſagreeing, he diſſolved them Feb. 4, with a moſt bitter ſpeech. This year Dunkirk, which was taken by the valour of the Engliſh, was delivered into the hands of his embaſſador Lockhart. His favourite daughter Mrs. Cleypole, being taken ill about this time, ſhe ſo exclaimed againſt his cruelties, that it wounded him more than her death, which happened Auguſt the 8th, and from this time, he grew daily more reſerved and ſuſpicious, not indeed without reaſon, for he found the nation in general greatly diſcontented. At Hampton-court, he was taken ill of a ſlow fever, which degenerating into an ague, deprived him of life, on Sept. the 3d, 1658.

In the neighbourhood of the city is a place called the Green or Meidan, where, the natives believe, was the ſeat of paradiſe; and they have a tradition among them, that Adam was formed of the duſt of the neighbouring fields. In the heart of the city is a high oval caſtle, flanked with towers, in which are ſome cannon. The only entrance to it is on the E. ſide, with a draw-bridge kept up with ſtone chains. Here are 15,000 Janiſſaries conſtantly kept, with a Begleberg or Baſha. It is the ſeat of a Greek patriarch; and was the birth-place of the famous St. John Damaſcen or Damaſcenus, and for his eloquence ſtyled Chryſologus, but much more eminent for his orthodoxy and ſanctity of life. He died here in 760. It lies 95 miles N. E. of Jeruſalem, and 210 S. of Aleppo. Lat. 33 deg. 25 min. N. long. 37 deg. 27 min. E.

DAVE'NANT, [SIR WILLIAM] was ſon of Mr. John Davenant, a citizen and tavern-keeper of Oxford, and was born in February 1605. In 1624, he entered a member of that univerſity; but being more inclined to a gay than ſedentary life, he did not remain long there, but repaired to court, and was made firſt page to Frances, ducheſs of Richmond, and from thence he removed to the family of lord Brooke, and during his reſiding with this family, produced his firſt comedy called Albovino, king of the Lombards, which was well received. Being of an amorous complexion, he was ſo unfortunate as to carry a mark of his irregular gallantries in the depreſſion of his noſe, and tho' this expoſed him to the rallery of his cotemporary wits, he was ſo little affected as to write a burleſque upon himſelf. Upon the death of Ben Johnſon, he ſucceeded to the laureat. As he he was ſtedfaſt in his loyalty to the king, he was accuſed by the parliament in 1641, of ſeducing the army from their authority, and attempting to bring them over to that of the king. This made him reſolve to place his ſafety in flight, but he was ſtopped at Feverſham, ſent to town, and committed to the care of a meſſenger. In July following, he was admitted to bail, and again endeavoured to avoid the troubles of the times, by withdrawing to France; but was ſeized in Kent. From this confinement he was ſoon releaſed, and at laſt retired beyond ſea. After ſome time he returned to England, and was by his old friend and patron the earl of Newcaſtle, made lieutenant-general of his ordnance, and in this capacity it is probable he behaved well, for in September 1643, he was knighted by the king, at the ſiege of Glouceſter. But the king's affairs becoming irretrievable, he once more left the kingdom, and went to France, where he got into ſuch favour with the queen, that ſhe truſted him with affairs of great importance. At the reſtoration, he had the patent of the duke's company of comedians granted to him, and he opened the theatre in Lincoln's Inn-fields, with the Siege of Rhodes, written by himſelf; the houſe being finely decorated, and the ſtage ornamented with painted ſcenes, which were by him introduced, if not invented. His dramatic performances were ſeventeen in number. He died April 17, 1688, and was interred in Weſtminſter Abbey. On his grave ſtone was inſcribed, in imitation of Ben Johnſon, this ſhort epitaph, "O rare Sir William Davenant."

DENBI'GHSHIRE, S. in Welch Sir Dhinbych, one of the ſix counties in North Wales. It is bounded on the S. by Montgomeryſhire; on the W. by thoſe of Merioneth and Caernarvon, from which laſt it is divided by the river Conway; on the E. by Shropſhire and Cheſhire; and on the N. it has the Iriſh ſea and Flintſhire. From N. E. to S. W. it meaſures forty miles; and from N. to S. twenty-one, containing about 410,000 acres. In it are reckoned fifty-ſeven pariſhes, four market-towns, and 38,000 inhabitants, particularly in the diocese of Bangor, and partly in that of St. Aſaph. It enjoys a ſalubrious but ſharp air. The W. part is heathy and barren, except the tract towards the ſea; and the E. part is equally ſterile, except towards the river Dee: but its middle part, which is a level of ſeventeen miles from N. to S. and about five broad, called the Vale of Clwyd, through which this river runs, is fruitful, and much inhabited by gentry. On one ſide it lies open to the ſea; and on the other hemmed in with high hills; from one of which ſprings the aforeſaid Clwyd, which, after fetching a compaſs to the S. E. runs N. by Ruthin, and not far from the town of Denbigh, entering Flintſhire before it reaches the Iriſh ſea. The other moſt conſiderable rivers are the Elwy, the Dee, and the Conway. The principal commodity here, beſides goats and ſheep, with black cattle, is rye, commonly called ameſ-corn, produced in the heathy parts by the manure of turf-aſhes, the common fuel in this ſhire. Here are ſeveral lead mines, particularly the marquis of Powis's. This county gives title to a branch of the Fielding family, and ſends but two members to parliament, namely, one for the ſhire, and the other for the county-town of Denbigh.

DE'NHAM, (Sir JOHN) an eminent poet in the ſeventeenth century, was the only ſon of Sir John Denham, Knt. of Little Horſey in Eſſex, ſome time chief baron of the exchequer in Ireland, and one of the lords juſtices of that kingdom. He was born at Dublin in 1615, and on his father's being made one of the barons of the exchequer in England, was brought over in 1617. He was educated at London, and entered, in 1631, at the age of 16, a gentleman commoner of Trinity College, Oxford; but here, as he was more addicted to gaming than ſtudy, he was looked on as a perſon of ſlow and unpromiſing parts: at his removal from hence to Lincoln's-Inn, he ſtill continued his practice of gaming, not only to the ruining of his fortune, but to the diſpleaſure of his father, who threatened to diſinherit him. The great truſt repoſed in him by the unfortunate martyr and his queen; the part he is ſuppoſed to have born in conveying away the duke of York; his being ſent embaſſador by Charles II. to the king of Poland; his being employed as ſurveyor of his majeſty's buildings on the death of Inigo Jones; and being created a knight of the Bath by King Charles II. at his reſtoration, are ſufficient indications of his talents for public employments. His poetical abilities were certainly very great, his diction and ſentiments ſublime, his expreſſions ſtrong, and his numbers harmonious. The Sophy, which he publiſhed in 1641, was ſo much admired, that even Mr. Waller could not help ſaying on its publication, that he broke out like the Iriſh rebellion, threeſcore thouſand ſtrong, and when no body was aware, or in the leaſt ſuſpected it. His Cooper's Hill has been celebrated by the beſt writers in our language. As a poet he has few faults; and if he had any in his life, let thoſe only cenſure who have none in theirs.

DEVO'NSHIRE, S. a county of England. It has the Engliſh channel on the S. the Briſtol channel on the N. It is divided on the W. from Cornwall by the river Tamar, which runs almoſt from the one channel to the other: and it is bounded on the E. by Somerſetſhire. It is about ſixty-nine miles long, and ſixty-ſix broad, containing 1,920,000 acres, twelve parliamentary boroughs, forty market-towns, 394 pariſhes, 117 vicarages, 1733 villages, and 340,000 inhabitants. Next to Yorkſhire, it is the largeſt and moſt populous county in England; and its people are ſo univerſally employed in trade, that it cannot be equalled by any in that kingdom. The air in its valleys is mild and ſharp, but healthy on its hills and heaths. The weſtern parts conſiſt of a mooriſh ſoil, or ſtiff clay; the latter bad for ſheep, but extremely well adapted for breeding great herds of fine oxen, fattened for the London markets. The ſoil of the north parts is dry, having very good downs for ſheep: and theſe being well-dreſſed with lime, dung, and ſand, yield tolerable crops of corn, but not ſo plentifully as in the middle and eaſtern parts; nor does it fall ſhort in meadow and paſture. Shell-ſand renders the moſt barren part fruitful; and in places remote from the ſea-ſhore, the upper turf being ſkimmed off, is burnt to aſhes; and this method of agriculture is called De'enſhiring. The ſouthern parts for fertility are juſtly eſteemed the garden of Devonſhire.

The Jewiſh rabbins on this account ſtile it משנה, Miſhneh, or the repetition. It is generally named אלה הדברים, Elleh-Haddebarim, which is one of the firſt words in the Hebrew. It was written, all but the laſt chapter, by Moſes, in the 120th year of his age, the laſt chapter being ſuppoſed by ſome to have been added by Joſhua immediately after Moſes's death; but by ſome it is ſuppoſed to have been written by Ezra.

DEW, S. [deawe, Sax. dauw, Belg. tauw, Teut.] in Natural Hiſtory, a light, thin, inſenſible miſt, or rain, raiſed from the earth after the ſun has deſcended below the horizon, by the heat it has communicated to the earth during the day; which miſt, meeting with the cold in the atmoſphere, is condenſed and precipitated on the earth again. Not but we muſt take notice it is the opinion that dews do not deſcend at all. The quantity of dew falling or evaporated throughout the year, is ingeniouſly calculated by the Rev. Dr. Hales, in his Vegetable Statics, and the great benefit this meteor is to the vegetable creation, and its ſufficiency to anſwer all the purpoſes it is deſigned for by the great architect of the world, may from thence be inferred with all that force, which can ſtrike a reaſonable mind with conviction, or elevate a devout diſpoſition to rapture.

To DEW, V. A. to wet or moiſten as with dew.
